TELLER OFFERS HIS SERVICES.

TENDER OF CORDIAL SUPPORT TO BRYAN.

HE WILL TAKE THE STUMP.

Thinks the Ticket Will Be Elected and Advises Against Promises and Pledges.

LINCOLN, Neb., July 18.—That William J. Bryan will receive the support of Henry M. Teller of Colorado there can be no longer any doubt. Mr. Bryan to-day received a letter from Senator Teller in which he assured him that he would support him in his race for President. The letter received reads as follows:

"DENVER, Colo., July 18, 1896.

"Hon. W. J. Bryan, Lincoln, Neb.:

"Dear Sir—I congratulate you on your nomination at Chicago. I think the country is to be congratulated also. I need not assure you that your nomination was more than satisfactory to me. I think we shall be able to consolidate all the friends of free silver in your support, and if we do this I believe you will be elected, although I do not overlook the tremendous power that will be put against us in this campaign. All the power of money and organized wealth, corporations and monopolies of all kinds will be against us. Justice is on our side and this is the cause of the people. It is a contest for industrial independence and for freedom from the domination of foreign powers and foreign capitalists, and it does not seem possible that in such a contest before the American people justice should fail and wrong prevail.

"I do not believe we shall fail. I think I can promise you the cordial support of the Western silver men who have heretofore acted with the Republican party, and if you get that I think all of the Western coast and inter-mountain States will be with you. I will not offer any suggestions to you save to advise you that, as you were nominated without pledges of favor or privilege to any one, you maintain that position and make no pledges or promises, so that you may go into the great office of President of the United States without the embarrassment that follows pledges and promises even if they are such as may be properly carried out. It will afford me pleasure to place myself at the disposal of the National Committee to make speeches in your behalf as my health will permit, where and when they may think I will do good. I am very respectfully,

"H. M. TELLER."

This letter greatly pleased Mr. Bryan. When Mr. Bryan had finished his breakfast this morning he turned his attention to the vast amount of mail that had accumulated during his absence. There were over 5,000 letters to be opened and read, and among the first to be opened was that from Mr. Teller. The letters were taken to Mr. Bryan's home, where he and his wife in their library began the arduous task of reading them. Mr. Bryan will not attempt to answer all of them until he has established headquarters and secured a private secretary. He will only attend to the more important letters.

Mr. Bryan was frequently interrupted by callers. Among the gentlemen to call to-day was G. F. Washburn of Boston, a member of the Populist National Committee, and T. M. Patterson, editor of the Rocky Mountain News of Denver. Mr. Patterson assured Mr. Bryan that he would receive the support of all the Democrats of Colorado, a majority of the Populists and a great many Republicans as well. He said that he believed that 80 per cent of the vote cast in Colorado would be for Bryan and free silver. Mr. Patterson is a delegate to the Populist convention at St. Louis and assured Mr. Bryan that he would do all in his power to have that convention indorse him for President. While Mr. Patterson was talking to Mr. Bryan, he received the following telegram from Forsythe, Mont.:

"Four State bimetallic and Populist delegates are on board the train and favorable to you. E. HOFF,
"Delegate from Oregon."

DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE.

Reasons for Preferring Washington for Headquarters.

Special to The Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—Senator Jones of Arkansas, the Chairman of the National Democratic Committee, has returned from New York and states that he had no conference nor did he see either Mr. Hill or Mr. Whitney. He expects to issue a call for a meeting of the National Committee in New York City at the time the notification committee formally informs Mr. Bryan of his nomination. It is not probable that the permanent headquarters of the committee will be selected until that time. The Senator prefers either Washington or Chicago for these headquarters.

The advantage of Washington is that it is so convenient to the materials that will be needed in the campaign. The committee, it is well known, expects to use vast quantities of public documents, speeches delivered by free silver advocates in Congress which will be franked through the mails. This will be a vast saving to the committee in the matter of postage.

Senator Jones left here to-day for Arkansas and will probably stop at St. Louis en route. He will return in about ten days. Democratic headquarters here are in active operation, Lawrence Gardiner being in charge as Secretary of the Congressional Campaign Committee and also of the National Association of Democratic Clubs. He said to-day that from this time on until the close of the campaign he will push the club work.

"I am receiving a great many communications from New York City," said he to-day, "containing applications for enrollment of Democratic clubs in the national organization. I get a letter this morning from the Russian-American Democratic Union of New York, with a membership of 12,000, stating that they fully indorsed the Chicago regular Democratic ticket and platform, and asking a place among the Democratic clubs. In to-day's mail I have also received a number of applications from smaller bodies for enrollment. The Bryan Free Silver League of New York starts with a membership of 100."

IT DIDN'T PAN OUT.

Effort to Fasten a Charge of Cruelty on Mr. Sewall.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—The Republican and anti-Democratic newspapers, having given up as a bad job their effort to find a flaw in the character of the Hon. William J. Bryan, the Democratic candidate for President, this week turned their attention to Mr. Arthur Sewall, the associate of Mr. Bryan on the ticket. After scouring every part of the country far and wide, and failing to discover anything against him in the broad United States, they at last hit upon the idea of looking up Mr. Sewall's ships on the high seas. They made the discovery that the captains of his vessels were sometimes severe in trying to enforce discipline among their seamen while on the broad seas. This attempt at discipline was made to appear as an act of downright cruelty on Mr. Sewall's part.

The News addressed Mr. Sewall on the subject and received the following reply today:

Bath, Me., July 18.—To the Editor of the News: Dear Sir—Your letter addressed to our senior, under date of July 15, has been handed to our firm for reply to the inquiries made therein.

We will not undertake to answer them separately, but will merely say that we have during forty years we have employed labor in our shipyard, had no trouble of any consequence. In regard to the allegations of the Red Book, as you term it, they are entirely without foundation, so far as our knowledge and authority extend. Yours truly

(Signed) ARTHUR SEWALL & CO.

BRYAN'S DOUBLE.

He Registers at a New York Hotel and Causes a Sensation.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—A man entered the Imperial Hotel yesterday morning and went up to register.

"It's Bryan, the Boy Orator," whispered the clerk as the guest in a breezy way whisked the register around and wrote in a bold hand: "W. J. Bryan, Nebraska."

The man was shown to a room with much ceremony. Every porter who was awake heard in ten minutes that the hotel covered a Presidential nominee. After breakfast the man asked for his bill. The clerk was hardly awake, but when the guest pointed out his name, W. J. Bryan, his eyes popped almost out of his head. The man was not quite six feet high, and weighed about 188 pounds. His face was smooth, his jaw heavy and square, his cheek bones prominent and his forehead high. His hair and eyes were dark. He had on a felt hat, a frock coat and dark trousers.

"I have to go to Trenton and make an address," said he as he left.

A dozen politicians got into a wrangle about him. One man said the newspapers were all liars. Another said Bryan was a follower of Blavatsky, and that either the body that was here or the body that was at Salem was his astral body. Hundreds examined the signature and it was declared just like Bryan's signature, as reproduced in the newspapers.

AMERICAN SEA FIGHTERS.

Preparations for North Atlantic Squadron Maneuvers.

NEW YORK, July 18.—The United States cruiser Cincinnati and the battleship Indiana are anchored off Tompkinsville. They are the first vessels of the North Atlantic Squadron to arrive there for the scheduled maneuvers. The Cincinnati arrived yesterday afternoon and the Indiana, which left Delaware Breakwater yesterday, was sighted off the Highlands this morning. The Montgomery is also expected. During the week the following ships are expected to arrive and join Admiral Bunce's maneuvers at sea: Flagship New York, cruisers Newark, Raleigh and Columbia; battleships Texas and Maine; monitors Terror and Katahdin. It will be the largest squadron of powerful ships flying the stars and stripes that has ever been assembled in this harbor.

BROOKLYN'S BANNER WARD.

It Will Surely Go for Bryan and Sewall and Free Silver.

Special to The Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—The Fourteenth Ward of Brooklyn has long been known as the banner ward of the Democracy in the Eastern District. For the past four years there has been a deficiency in the old-time majority of the ward, but owing to the obnoxious Raines law and other grievances it is believed that Bryan and Sewall will receive the largest majority of votes that any Presidential candidate has ever received in one ward in a number of years.

The sentiment of the members of the various clubs is strongly for Bryan and Sewall. A prominent resident said: "We have suffered for a long time from Republican misrule and the goldbugs of Wall Street. It is now time that true Democrats should assert themselves and give their hearty support to the cause of silver." Some of the famous politicians and literary lights of Brooklyn were born in this ward, the majority of them of humble origin.

TAUBENECK BREAKS SILENCE.

UNALTERABLY OPPOSED TO INDORSING BRYAN AND SEWALL.

VOTERS WOULDN'T TURN OUT.

The Chairman of the People's Party Insists That It Must Put Out a Ticket.

Chairman Taubeneck came out of his cyclone cellar yesterday and gave his views as to what the People's party should and will do at its convention next week.

The questions had been sent to him at divers times since the Chicago convention, but he had refused to reply to them.

The following interview was prepared by him and given to the Post-Dispatch:

"Are you in favor of the Populists indorsing the Democratic ticket nominated at Chicago?"

"No! Under no consideration will I vote to indorse Bryan and Sewall at the Populist convention to be held in this city July 22. That would mean the surrender and destruction of the People's party organization."

"Have you any idea what the Populists will do towards combining all the elements opposed to the gold standard in the coming campaign?"

"I believe that the People's party convention will favor the idea of nominating a candidate for President and Vice-President and then combine the votes of the two parties on one set of electors. This can be done without the sacrifice of principles or our organization and will also unite the elements opposed to the gold standard."

"Do you believe that if the People's Party National Convention should indorse Mr. Bryan that the entire vote of that party would go to him at the polls next November?"

"No. If the People's Party National Convention should indorse Mr. Bryan and Mr. Sewall, the leaders could not deliver more than 66 per cent of the Populist vote throughout the United States. The members of the People's party possess a strong individuality and will not follow their leaders if they attempt to lead them against their will. The stay-at-home vote in the People's party would be large enough to defeat Mr. Bryan in many of the Western States."

"Do you think that if the People's party should nominate a candidate for President and Vice-President and then combine on electors that the entire vote could be polled for such electors?"

"Yes; I believe that the full Populist strength could be polled at the November election for the electors. This, in my opinion, is the only possible way to defeat McKinley at the polls next November. Since the Chicago Convention I have communicated with the Populists throughout the United States and know that the Democratic ticket nominated at Chicago will not be indorsed by our convention next week."

A SECRET SCHEME.

Another Convention Planned If Teller Is Indorsed Here This Week.

CHICAGO, July 18.—There are reasons for believing that Chairman Taubeneck's secret mission to this city had to do with another Populistic convention, to be held here by the "middle-of-the-road" faction of the party in case the regular convention at St. Louis indorses Bryan.

A movement looking to the holding of this convention was started here Friday, and two well known hotel men visited other hotel men and the officials of the Illinois Central road with the purpose of raising $1,500, the amount necessary for bringing the convention here.

VANDERBILT IS BETTER.

If the Cool Weather Continues, He Is Expected to Recover.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Cornelius Vanderbilt continues to improve. The coolness of the atmosphere is much in his favor. All of the members of Mr. Vanderbilt's family are encouraged by his improvement in the past thirty-six hours. They hope that the cool weather may prevail a few days longer. The progress is, however, slow.

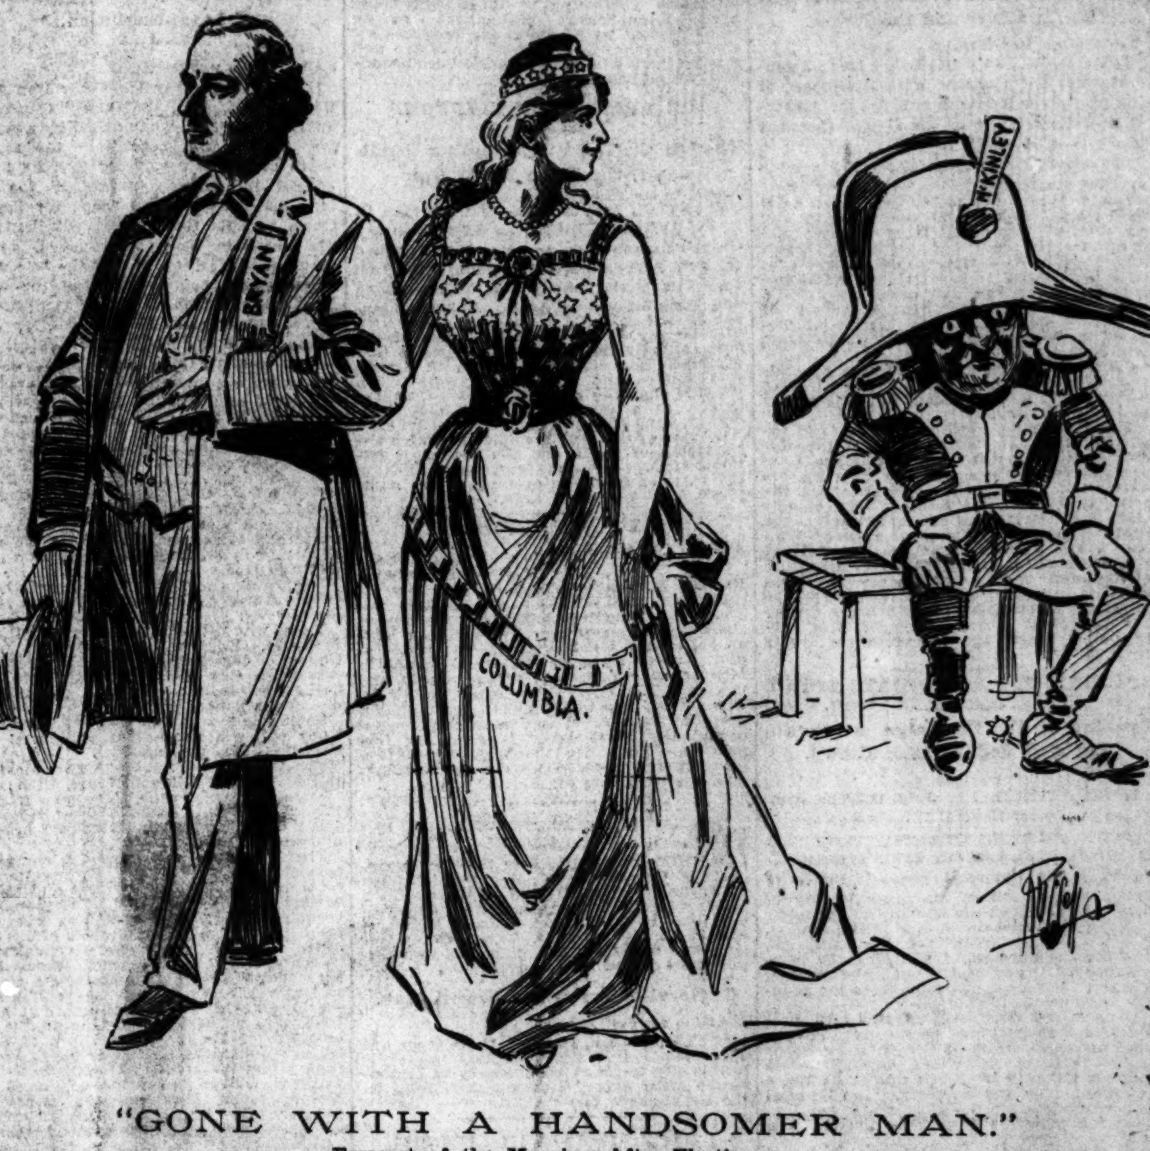
Dr. McLane said to-day that with the same weather conditions and all other things favorable to Mr. Vanderbilt it would probably be two weeks before he could be moved to Newport, as his family have planned. The physicians examined the patient and then held a consultation this morning. Dr. McLane said then that if there were the slightest change for the worse a bulletin to that effect would be issued immediately. The doctor said that there seemed a disposition on the part of some persons to think that Mr. Vanderbilt was in a much more serious condition than the reports showed. He said that this was all wrong, that the bulletins given were absolutely accurate.

This statement of Dr. McLane's was confirmed in a practical way last evening by the sending of cablegrams to Dr. Depew and Dr. Greer of St. Bartholomews. Dr. Depew had made all arrangements to cut his stay short and sail on the Lucania to-day. The message to him said: "Better; don't sail." Dr. Greer had cabled that he would come home immediately, but was advised not to do so.

Waterworks for Dexter.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

DEXTER, Mo., July 18.—The question of water works and electric lights has been definitely settled so far as Dexter is concerned, and they will be put in as soon as the preliminary surveys and specifications can be drawn. An engineer is now at work on the plans and survey, and active work will begin by the first day of August. The City Council has not yet placed the $10,000 bond issue, but will do so at once.



"GONE WITH A HANDSOMER MAN."
Forecast of the Morning After Election.

CLEVELAND ON PARTY FEALTY.

He Believed, Four Years Ago, That Submission to the Will of the Majority Was "the Underlying Principle of Party Organization."

Before the Democratic convention of 1892 the Atlanta Constitution actively supported David B. Hill's candidacy for the Democratic nomination for the Presidency. But Cleveland was nominated, and thereupon Clark Howell, managing editor of the Constitution, in his capacity as member of the Democratic National Committee from Georgia, and also acting for the Constitution, wrote Mr. Cleveland, giving the assurance that, yielding to the expressed will of the majority of the party, the Constitution would support him for election as loyally and zealously as it had heretofore opposed his nomination. To this letter Mr. Cleveland replied in a letter which, as an essay on the "principles of party organization," so thoroughly fits the situation to-day that it is reproduced from the Constitution, with the hope that it may again be of service to the Democracy in pointing out the path of party duty. The letter follows:

GRAY GABLES, BUZZARD'S BAY, Mass., July 16, 1892.—Clark Howell, Esq.: My Dear Sir—The receipt of your recent letter has gratified me exceedingly. It has a tone of true Democracy about it, and is pervaded with the sort of Democratic frankness which is very pleasing.

I think THE UNDERLYING PRINCIPLE OF PARTY ORGANIZATION is what you so admirably express as an ACCEPTANCE OF THE ARBITRAMENT OF THE NATIONAL CONVENTION. On the other hand it is as fully the duty of one opposed to shut his mind and heart to any feeling of irritation or resentment that might be allowed to grow out of opposition based upon honest judgment and a conscientious desire for party success.

I am not surprised, though I am gratified, by the announcement that from this time to the close of the campaign your own service and the invaluable influence of the Constitution will be devoted to the fight for Democratic success. It honestly seems to me that Democrats who are not at this time LOYAL TO THE CAUSE ARE RECREANT TO THEIR COUNTRY.

Personal advancement of man is nothing; the triumph of the principles we advocate is everything.

Hoping that we may congratulate each other on a glorious result in November, I am, yours sincerely,

GROVER CLEVELAND.

BY THE STATE.

The Unemployed of New York Will Be Found Work by the State's Employment Bureau.

Special to The Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—The Free Employment Bureau, authorized by the Legislature at its last session, will be opened in this city Monday. The bureau belongs to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, of which John M. McDonough is commissioner. The purpose of the bureau is to reduce the number of unemployed in the city of New York, without regard to age or sex. Every person who applies for a place will be required to register their name in a book especially prepared for that purpose. The applicant will be required to fill out an application blank, giving his name, age, nationality, previous occupation, name of previous employer, how long idle, reason for idleness, extent of education, trade, if any, rate of wages received from last employer, whether married or single, number of dependent children, etc. When these applications are handed in at the main office, an officer of the bureau will be immediately dispatched to inquire into the case. If it is found the applicant misrepresented his case he will be called to account for it, but such conduct will not be regarded as sufficient reason for declining to help him. On the contrary, it is one of the objects of the bureau to assist unfortunate people, whether they are honest or not.

When the applications are returned by the investigator they will be immediately sent to the Bureau of Labor Statistics at Albany. The names of applicants sent to the Commissioner of Labor Statistics will be printed by him and then shipped to the Supervisors of every village in the State. They will be instructed to post the list in a conspicuous place and on application from a prospective employer give such a description of the applicant as is furnished in his application. These districts will be altered regularly. The local bureau has the names of a large number of merchants and manufacturers, who, hearing of the scheme, have volunteered any assistance they may be able to render.

Applicants who prefer to work in the city will be placed in communication with such manufacturers or merchants through the bureau. A successful applicant will be required to notify the bureau within ten days from the time he receives employment. On failure to comply with this injunction he will be excluded from the privileges of the bureau. This penalty can only be reversed by the commissioner upon the application of the superintendent. The employers will also be requested to keep the bureau informed as to the conduct of persons employed through the bureau.

The scheme is experimental. Upon the results attained in the first year will depend its continuance. The idea was derived from a similar experiment instituted in Ohio several years ago. Nothing on this scale was ever tried here before.

HAS HAD ENOUGH.

Rebenack Declines to Run Again for the School Board.

It was announced yesterday by H. H. Rebenack that he would not permit the use of his name as a candidate for a seat in the School Board from the Third District. Since the decision of the Supreme Court declaring Mr. Rebenack ineligible to the seat he occupied in the board as representative of the Third School District, his friends have been led to believe that he would be a candidate. To a Post-Dispatch reporter yesterday, however, he stated emphatically that he would not accept the Republican nomination if tendered, nor serve if elected.

Bar on Judge Phillips' Death.

A meeting of the St. Louis Bar will be held at 4 o'clock Monday afternoon in court-room No. 4 to take suitable action concerning the death of Judge John W. Phillips.

WILL WRITE IN MANY CITIES.

AN INVENTION TO REVOLUTIONIZE NEWSPAPER WORK.

THE OWNER SURE OF SUCCESS.

Joseph Joachim Reifgraber Claims That He Can Write and Set Type by Electricity.

Joseph Joachim Reifgraber of 1118 North Thirteenth street has invented and patented an apparatus that threatens to revolutionize the newspaper world.

If all that the inventor claims for his machine is realized, it will be possible for a newspaper correspondent to sit at his desk in St. Louis and write an article on an instrument fashioned like a typewriter and that article by an electrical device will be reproduced simultaneously in as many newspaper offices as are connected with the transmitting wire. But this is not all; the message is received at the other end in such form as to admit of its being attached to another instrument, and by an automatic process have itself set up on a Lynotype, without the intervention of a Lynotype operator.

The inventor calls his system "Electric Typography," and claims that under its operation an editor or reporter in writing an article may not only set it up in type for his own paper, but may, automatically, write it and set it up in type at fifty or a hundred places simultaneously.

Mr. Reifgraber was seen last night at his residence by a Post-Dispatch reporter. He is about 40 years old, and a native of Austria, but has lived in St. Louis for upwards of twenty years. He is a machinist and practical electrician, and was until a few months ago employed as foreman of the manufacturing department of the Holekamp-Moore Instrument Company. He has been at work for seven years evolving his invention, and in February last applied for a patent, which was granted July 14. He has also taken steps to protect his rights in England, Canada and other foreign countries.

He is at work now building one of his machines, and hopes to have it completed in time for exhibition this fall at the Exposition.

He produced two sets of elaborate drawings attached to his letters patent and explained that the apparatus would not occupy much more space than a sewing machine and ought not to cost much more than a typewriter, which it resembles in many ways.

"In operating the keys of this instrument," said Mr. Reifgraber, "the operator does not only print the respective characters represented by the various keys, but at the same time, after a line is completed, sets in motion a perforating mechanism within the same instrument, which produces on a strip of paper a perforation for every key depressed and every character printed, and when the message is completed the operator has produced two copies, one in typewritten form, which he may place on file, the other in the shape of a perforated strip of paper, containing as many perforations as there are characters printed.

"The perforated strip is inserted in a small electrical instrument which is called 'the transmitter,' and is in electrical contact with a telegraph wire, connecting, let us say, St. Louis with Chicago. At the Chicago end of the wire there will be an instrument exactly similar to that at the St. Louis end. As the perforated strip passes through the transmitter at the rate of 2,000 to 3,000 perforations approximately per minute, electrical impulses will shoot over the wire automatically reproducing in Chicago identically the same typewritten characters and perforated slip that were originally produced at this end. The typewritten copy is laid aside for reference and the perforated slip is inserted in a little instrument, especially devised for the purpose, which I shall call 'transmitter No. 2,' and is attached to the Mergenthaler Linotype machine, thereby automatically operating the same and setting up the message in type. Between the transmitting and receiving points any number of similar instruments may be connected with the same wire, at various cities and towns, and all will do the same work at the same time."

"How about errors?"

"There will be no chance for an error if the operator is reasonably accurate. If he should accidentally depress the wrong key he can change the character by touching another key."

"Is a perforation made every time a key is depressed?"

"No. The perforations are made only after a line is completed."

"Is there any doubt as to the practical success of your invention?"

"Its accomplishment is not by any means as difficult as it was to develop and successfully construct the type-setting machine, or to transmit sound over a wire, or to reproduce music and speech by a phonograph, the feasibility of all of which were questioned at the outset."

Mr. Reifgraber has been offered $10,000 cash for his invention, but has politely refused the offer.

He says he has the capital behind him to put his invention to the test, and has no fears of the outcome.

Mr. Reifgraber is a self-made man. Tall, slim, with light, close-cut hair, and a round, well-shaped head, he is a fine type of the intelligent German-American mechanic. He speaks English fluently, but with a decided German accent. He is a man of family, having a wife and two children, one of whom, a boy of 16 or so, is employed at the St. Louis Tribune office.

Mr. Reifgraber is a man of steady and sober habits and has remedied the defects of his early education by a course of reading and hard study, prosecuted after his arduous day's labor was done.

He never seeks relaxation in beer saloons, but devotes all his leisure time to reading, thought and study.

AWAITING ORDERS FROM WHITNEY.

WALL STREET DEMOCRATS ARE GRINDING THEIR KNIVES.

SECRETARY REEDY'S VIEWS.

They Coincide With Those of the Capitalists Who Want Missouri to Go Republican.

The Wall street Democrats of St. Louis are moving actively and with system to organize a bolt in Missouri as directed by their bosses in the East.

A meeting of about twenty of them was held Friday afternoon in the law office of Col. James O. Broadhead, President Cleveland's ex-Minister to Switzerland, and they formed a Committee on Correspondence. The members of this committee are Fred W. Lehman, late of Iowa and now a local corporation attorney; Dr. Carl Daenzer, the erudite but dyspeptic editor of the Anzieger des Westens, and Rolla Wells, who recently resigned the presidency of the St. Louis Democracy because he could not browbeat that organization into support of the ticket nominated here in June by Mark Hanna and the platform dictated by Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, author of the Force bill, and by Dr. Chauncey M. Depew, the representative in all things of the Vanderbilts.

The Secretary of the committee is William Marion Reedy, the brilliant feuilletonist who is a goldbug mainly because of his contempt for proletariat and his love for "Fred" Lehman and George P. Tansey, a bright reconteur and wealthy young attorney.

The bulk of the correspondence will, of course, devolve upon Mr. Reedy. He yesterday sent out a circular letter to numerous Democrats of Missouri whose addresses were furnished him by the committee, asking them to forward to him at the earliest possible date the names and addresses of other Democrats known to them who favor the single gold standard and who feel inclined to join an independent movement in Missouri to oppose the work of the Chicago convention.

Mr. Reedy expects to receive sacks of mail in response to his circular, but he doesn't know yet to what use the names and addresses will be put except the listing of them as a kind of "roll of honor" after the style of that compiled by Chief Factionist David R. Francis at the meeting he got together in St. Louis last spring.

"In fact," said Mr. Reedy to a Post-Dispatch reporter, "I hardly know yet what my duties are to be. You see, I didn't know the honor of the secretaryship was to be offered to me. Word came to me from Col. Broadhead's office about 3 o'clock Friday afternoon that my presence was desired there. When I got there they told me I had been elected Secretary. I accepted it, of course, because I despise the whole aggregation of degenerates whose maniacal conduct I witnessed at Chicago, and am willing to do anything I can to help save the country from this economic idiocy.

"But really besides large quantities of talk by nearly everybody present, the meeting at Col. Broadhead's office did nothing. And I don't see that anything can be done until we locate the sound money sentiment of the State and get the views of those who entertain it as how best to proceed."

From another source it was learned that the intention of the St. Louis Wall Street Democrats is to call a conference of their followers in this city at an early date, at which the advisability of convening a State Convention for the nomination of a full State ticket, including presidential electors, will be discussed.

Col. Broadhead the other day wrote to William C. Whitney inquiring what the purpose of the Eastern bolters was and advising him that their Missouri sympathizers were awaiting their pleasure.

Col. Broadhead hasn't received a reply from Mr. Whitney yet, and will be in the dark until he does.

It is manifestly evident, however, that if Mr. Whitney gives the command for an independent movement the St. Louis Wall street Democrats, with all those from the interior of the State that they can draft, will gladly obey.

It was stated to a Post-Dispatch reporter by one of them high in authority that whether or not Whitney counsels a complete independent movement in Missouri, they will nominate "sound money" Democrats in the fifteen congressional districts of the State, and by that means make such inroads on the regular Democratic strength in the congressional elections as to send a solid Republican delegation to Washington.

SENATOR FAULKNER.

Doesn't Like the Platform, but Will Vote the Ticket.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 18.—Senator Faulkner, Chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, having been quoted in an interview as saying he was "in thorough sympathy with the Chicago platform and the ticket," to-day sent out a card of correction. In it he said: "The statement does not correctly define my position, and I feel unwilling to let it pass by in silence. I should not have voted for the platform as presented, as in several respects it does not give expression to my views on certain public questions. The majority of that fairly and regularly constituted convention, however, adopted that declaration of principles. Such a majority can alone determine the principles and policies of a national party. Believing that the candidates nominated and that the platform adopted, taken in connection with the history and traditions of the party, more nearly expresses my ideas in reference to public questions than the Republican candidates nominated and the platform adopted at St. Louis, I shall give my earnest support to the nominees of the Chicago convention."

WILL VOTE FOR BRYAN.

A Number of Republicans of Cleveland, O.

Special to The Post-Dispatch.

CLEVELAND, O., July 18.—A number of Republicans of this city have turned their backs upon their party, and come out for Bryan and silver.

Fred A. Stranahan said: "I have voted the Republican ticket all my life, but I am a silver man. I take a further interest in the Democratic platform, because of its utterances on the income tax question. I am one of a family of five, and all will vote the Democratic ticket."

Neil Young of the same firm: "I have always been a Republican, but I believe in the justice of the free silver movement and shall vote for Bryan."

A. S. Beecher, commission merchant: "I am a Republican and a protectionist, but am a free silver man. I shall vote for Bryan and trust that protection legislation will take care of itself later on."

A. Sulter, commission merchant: "I will vote for Bryan though I never voted a Democratic ticket at a general election in my life." Mr. Sulter's two sons express the same sentiments.

M. A. King, insurance agent: "I have never voted any but the Republican ticket, but I must confess that I am on the fence this time and I know a lot more who are in the same position."

LABOR LEADERS FOR BRYAN.

New York Labor Organizations Will Be for Silver and the Ticket.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Labor leaders generally are enthusiastic in their support of the free silver platform and Bryan. General Secretary White of the United Garment Workers said to-day:

"I believe Bryan represents the masses against plutocracy."

Daniel Walsh of the Musical Union said: "I have yet to hear one word said by any member of organized labor against the character, honesty and ability of Bryan and Sewall. The workingmen should get up a demonstration and indorse the Democratic platform and nominees."

Thomas F. Downes of the Society of Plumbers said: "Bryan is the foe of monopolists, and every sensible workingman will vote for him."

George W. Leese of the Gotham Association of Garment Workers said: "I have always been a Republican, but this year I will vote for Bryan."

The Journeymen Bakers' Union is in favor of Bryan and silver. One of the official announcements of the Chicago Convention says: "The fight is now on between the trusts and monopolies and the small tradesmen and farmers. The middle class is struggling for existence against the growing power of the plutocrats of Wall Street and their consorts in the field of commerce and industry. The new departure of the party is a sign of a general awakening now going on; the first skirmish in the great class struggle that will bring the labor movement into the foreground of public policy before the twentieth century is upon us."

SPRINGFIELD DEMOCRATS RALLY

Opening of the Campaign Attracts a Big and Enthusiastic Crowd.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., July 18.—The campaign of 1896 for Central Illinois was opened here to-night by the Democratic party. The meeting was an open-air affair and attended by many thousand people. Bands of music and a grandly elaborate display of fireworks preceded the opening of the meeting, which was held in the public square. Being the first "rally" of the campaign, and for the purpose of ratifying the nominations of Bryan and Sewall, the meeting attracted hundreds of people from the country and surrounding towns.

Gen. Alfred Orendorff, of this city, presided, and in opening the meeting, gave a succinct explanation of 16 to 1, and what it would do for working men, capitalists and citizens alike. His speech was many times interrupted by the cheering. The General is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Congress from this district, and will, in all probability be nominated.

The other speakers were: Wiley E. Jones of Arizona, who is visiting relatives here; James M. Graham of this city and E. C. Knotts of Macoupin County. Their speeches were excellent and accorded hearty applause. Gov. Altgeld, Bryan and Sewall and Orendorff's names were received with tumultuous applause all through the meeting.

WILL REMAIN LOYAL.

A Sound Money Democrat Who Will Vote for Bryan.

Special to The Post-Dispatch.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., July 18.—E. C. Wall, a sound money man and member of the Democratic National Committee for Wisconsin, announces that he will support Bryan.

"Believing that the ascendency of the Democratic party is the only surety for a true republican form of government, and believing that great principles can be secured only through party organization, and that for effective party organization discipline is indispensable, I prefer to appear inconsistent in one matter than to do violence to my political principles and to stultify all the political acts and utterances of my life. I can abide one great error in the platform of the Democratic convention rather than encourage insubordination or aid directly or indirectly the return of the Republican party to power in the nation. Notwithstanding the fact that my views on the money question are not in accord with those expressed by the recent Democratic National Convention, I submit and will support and vote for the nominee."

WILL CALL A SPECIAL TERM.

Gov. Morton Will Have Two Important Cases of Gambling Investigated.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—It was stated today that in response to a request made to him by citizens of Long Island City, Gov. Morton will order the special grand-jury and an extraordinary term of the Supreme Court there early next month. The jury will investigate the gambling cases in that city and the alleged connection of officials with them. It is also said that many indictments stored up in the District Attorneys' offices will be called for trial. Among them is one against Mayor Gleason for conspiring to defraud the city of $2,200 by selling it a worn-out fire engine, alleged to have been purchased as old junk for $50. The transaction took place during his last term as Mayor, and the indictment was found in April, 1893.

Another is against Thomas P. Burke, City Clerk under Gleason in 1892, who is charged with issuing a false certificate of election to Gleason instead of giving a certificate to Horatio Sanford, who defeated Gleason by several hundred votes. Burke disappeared after giving the certificate and remained in hiding several months. He was indicted in March, 1893.

DUQUOIN DEMOCRATS ORGANIZE.

A Bryan and Sewall Free Silver Club Starts With 250 Names.

Special to The Post-Dispatch.

DUQUOIN, Ill., July 18.—A large and enthusiastic meeting of Duquoin Democrats was held this evening for the purpose of organizing a Bryan and Sewall Free Silver Club. In a short time 250 names had been enrolled as members of the club. The following officers were elected: W. E. Brookings, president; F. A. Anderson, vice-president; E. C. Buice, secretary; Ira Trout, corresponding secretary; J. J. Downey, treasurer. An Executive Committee of five was appointed to draft constitution and by-laws. The club starts off with excellent prospects, having for members some of the best citizens of Duquoin. The prospects for silver victory in this (Perry) county in November are flattering.

BETWEEN MONEY AND MEN.

The Fight That Turns So Many Voters to Bryan.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Former State Senator John G. Boyd of the Citizens' Alliance said to-day: "We have always opposed trusts and monopolies. In this fight we are for Bryan against McKinley. Our executive committee has unanimously ratified the ticket and platform. The sound money people are people connected with corporations, trusts and combinations of grasping wealth. It is the fight between the idle wealthy and honest toilers. In my opinion the Bryan ticket will keep Hanna and his crowd busy in this State. Whenever a millionaire Democrat jumps over to McKinley a Republican farmer and a Republican workman declare for Bryan. I was really astounded at the growing sentiment in favor of silver. If the election was billed for next Tuesday, McKinley would be badly beaten, and unless there is a change in the situation he will never be President."

MINNESOTA REPUBLICANS.

A Large Number of Them Are for Bryan.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 18.—Five hundred silver Republicans in convention assembled yesterday indorsed Bryan and instructed the thirty delegates to the St. Louis Silver Convention to do all in their power to secure an indorsement of the Chicago nominees. Last night in the same auditorium in which Harrison was nominated in 1892, 6,000 silver men met and ratified the nomination of Bryan. It was distinctly a meeting of those who have been Republican. Prominent among those present were several ex-Congressmen, the Lieutenant-Governor of the State and many others who have hitherto been prominent Republicans.

DE ARMOND AT CLINTON.

Though the Home of Opposing Candidates, the Town Turns Out.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CLINTON, Mo., July 18.—Congressman D. A. De Armond delivered an address in the Court-house to-night to an audience packed to suffocation, notwithstanding the fact that this is the home of both Republican and Prohibition opponents. A large number of women were present. His discourse was largely on the financial issues of the day, taking strong grounds for the 16 to 1 doctrine. His reference to W. J. Bryan was loudly and uproariously applauded. He said that the nomination of Bryan belonged to a representation of old Democracy, and freed from its load of the "Old man of the Sea" it would step forth the champion of youth and the herald of national prosperity and integrity. This is the most enthusiastic opening of the campaign ever witnessed here.

Bixby for Bryan.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Former Senator Francis M. Bixby of the O'Brien Democracy said to-day: "Our organization declared for free silver before the meeting of the Chicago convention. We will give Bryan an active and loyal support. The platform of the party suits us and we recognize in Mr. Bryan a champion of the people and masses. The only Democrats I know of who are opposed to the ticket and platform are the Wall Street and syndicate Democrats. Organized labor is solid for free coinage. There are thousands of Republican wage earners, mechanics and workingmen who will vote for Bryan."

Carrollton Ratifies.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CARROLLTON, Ill., July 18.—The Democrats of Carrollton ratified the nomination of Bryan and Sewall here to-night with a rousing meeting. Addresses were delivered by Hons. H. C. Withers, Thomas Henshaw and J. C. Bowman. A Bryan free silver club was organized and many old-time Republicans joined it.

Taylorville Bryan and Sewall Club.

Special to The Post-Dispatch.

TAYLORVILLE, Ill., July 18.—A large and enthusiastic free silver meeting was held in this city to-night, resulting in an organization with over 200 members, known as the Bryan Free Silver Club.

JACK SHEA'S FATE.

He Will Be Brought Here From the Columbus Pen to Be Tried for the Murder of Officer Dundon.

Jack Shea, the slayer of Patrolman Dundon, and the only man who escaped three times from the St. Louis jail, will be returned to St. Louis Aug. 10 when his sentence in the Ohio penitentiary at Columbus expires.

Jack Shea is one of the famous criminals in the police annals of the country. Before he struck St. Louis, ten years ago, he had a reputation on which he could have been convicted as an habitual criminal. He was arrested in this city on a charge of grand larceny and was not in jail long when with three other prisoners he escaped through a skylight on the roof of the bastile.

The three of them were getting out of town on a Frisco freight train when one of them, Cunningham, had a fight with a brakeman. Cunningham tried to throw the brakeman off the top of the box car when the brakeman shot and killed him.

Shea was arrested and taken back to the jail, but had been there only a short time when he looked for an opportunity, and while being transferred to a court-room, he broke away and ran.

On the way up Twelfth street he met some acquaintances and one of them gave him a revolver. At the corner of St. Charles street he met Officer Dundon, who attempted to stop him.

Shea drew his revolver and shot and instantly killed the patrolman.

The escaping prisoner was pursued down town, and was captured in the alley back of the Laclede Hotel.

He then remained in jail until October of 1891, when he was one of the nine prisoners who walked out of the jail through the kitchen, got in a buggy standing in front of Pete Morrissey's saloon and drove away.

Nothing more was heard of Shea until about a year ago, when he was found in the Columbus Penitentiary, to where he had been sentenced, having been convicted of burglary in Cincinnati.

His sentence expires Aug. 10, and when he is released from the Ohio prison he will be met in the Warden's office by a St. Louis detective, who will bring him back to this city to answer for the killing of Patrolman Dundon.

SCALPED BY A THIEF.

John Dicristina Tries to Stop a Till-Tapper With Painful Results.

John Dicristina conducts a lunch wagon at Tenth and Market streets, and because he objected to a man tapping the till, is now minus four square inches of skin on the top of his head.

A young man ordered a chicken sandwich, and while the proprietor of the wagon was not watching him, he extracted 60 cents from the cash drawer. Dicristina tried to stop him and the young man hurled a plate at him. The dish scraped the skin off the top of his head and the thief escaped.

The horse stabbing fiend resumed his work of a few weeks ago by stabbing a horse last night belonging to S. P. Keyes, 1100 St. Ange avenue, while it was standing in front of 410 Pine street. The wound was inflicted in the side of the animal, and was nearly two inches deep.

Fell Off a Street Car.

MORE TROOPS FROM SPAIN.

EXPEDITIONS TO EMBARK IN AUGUST AND SEPTEMBER.

THIRD ONE IN DECEMBER.

The Regulars Will Be Accompanied by 4,000 Volunteers Supported by Subscription.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Senor Don Arturo Baldasano Topete, the Consul General for Spain in this city, when asked by a reporter for information regarding the reported death of Jose Maceo, said that he had no official information regarding the matter. Asked as to the outlook for Spain in Cuba, he said that it was excellent; that the rebellion had, he believed, reached its maximum strength; that the rebels were in two main commands; that the one in Pinar del Rio under Maceo was hemmed in by the new trocha and can not escape. The rebels in the eastern part of Central Cuba and in Eastern Cuba under Gomez and the others were not, he declared, advancing to the relief of Antonio Maceo, but were reported to be falling back on Eastern Cuba, where marked discontent was reported in the rebel camps, and that the presence of Gomez was necessary to maintain discipline and uphold the authority of Calixto Garcia.

Regarding the discontent among the Rebels, Senor Baldasano said that many blacks and whites were surrendering with horse and arms, and that under the orders of Gen. Weyler, they were placed on parole and released.

Regarding the August and September reinforcements for Cuba, he gave the following details:

There are fifty-six battalions of the line in Spain. Each will organize two expeditionary companies of the following strength: One captain, four subalterns, five sergeants, ten corporals, five trumpeters and 230 men each.

Spain has ten battalions of sharpshooters. They will contribute two companies each, organized like the infantry.

The Canary Islands have two local battalions. They will contribute their quota of two companies each. The men from the islands will be deemed a local reserve in Cuba to supply vacancies caused by death and wounds.

The preceding will give 138 companies, consisting of 138 captains, 552 subalterns, a total of 690 officers. The rank and file will consist of 690 Sergeants, 1,380 Corporals, 690 trumpeters, and 31,740 soldiers, making a total infantry strength of 34,500 officers and men. A small detachment of cavalry will be sent. It will be under the command of a Lieutenant-Colonel, two Majors, a Captain and two Lieutenants. There will also be sent a detachment of artillery, numbering 1,250 men, 800 of whom belong to the field batteries of the Royal Artillery of Spain, 160 to mounted batteries and 290 to various ranks from the artillery establishment. The artillery will be under the command of a Major, seven Captains and twenty-two Lieutenants. Also a detachment of engineers, consisting of 1,539 men, of whom 915 will be sappers and miners, 300 from the regiment of military telegraphers, 324 from the regiment of railway engineers. They will be commanded by a Lieutenant-Colonel, two Majors, seventeen Captains and sixty subalterns.

The total strength of August and September expeditions will be as follows: Infantry, all ranks, 35,190; cavalry, all ranks, 467; artillery, all ranks, 1,282; engineers, 1,619; Total, 38,558. Between August 15th and 20th all the infantry will embark. Early in September the other detachments will follow. The regulars enumerated above will be accompanied by two full battalions of volunteers, consisting of four thousand men, the latter organized by the Bishop of Oviedo in Asturias. The two regiments will be supported by a popular subscription and maintained by that province. In December 20,000 reinforcements will be forwarded to Cuba. All will be sent in the armed cruisers of the Spanish Trans-Atlantic Company. If necessary the number will be made up to 100,000 men. The volunteering of civilians in Spain is receiving the active aid of the Bishops and clergy.

SPAIN NOT READY.

She Will Not Ally With France and Russia Just Yet.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—The World to-day has the following cable from Madrid:

"The Spanish Government, I learn, positively, does not intend to adopt the suggestions of the opposition, nor yield to the popular clamor for an alliance with France and Russia. Spanish diplomacy has found out again that both those powers would accept Spain willingly as ally on European and African questions, but neither would like to go beyond the mildest and most platonic mediation between Spain and the United States in regard to the Cuban question.

"The Madrid Government will take no ostensible step, I also understand, to solicit European support as long as it can keep up appearances of friendly relations with the United States, but at the same time it will try to arrange concerted action by all European powers to put pressure upon the United States some day, if it should be necessary, to let Spain settle her difficulty with Cuba on the understanding that she shall give to the European powers and the United States explicit official assurance of her intention to grant autonomy to Cuba immediately after pacification, and to Porto Rico as a sine qua non condition of the moral support of the European powers."

Plum Mr. Booth Is Seeking.

There has been some confusion in the newspapers about the candidacy of John Wesley Booth for the Democratic nomination for Judge of the Court of Appeals. It has been said that he was seeking a nomination for the Supreme bench. This is not true. As published hitherto correctly in the Post-Dispatch, he aspires to a seat on the Court of Appeals bench.

Fell Downstairs.

She is at the City Hospital unconscious, but not in a serious condition.

POPS WONT DIVIDE.

Taubeneck Has the Citizens' $10,000 and He Is Letting the Silver Men Pay Their Own Way.

Chairman Taubeneck of the Populist Executive Committee still refuses to divide even a little bit of the $10,000 donated by the Citizens Committee to the Populist and National Silver conventions.

Mr. Taubeneck's reason for this is that the $10,000 is not nearly enough to pay the expenses of his own convention.

The Citizens' Committee, as such, insists that it has performed its share of the convention contract, and that its funds are exhausted.

In the meantime the silver men are digging down into their own pockets and going ahead to hold their convention.

When the real state of affairs became known, Capt. James Bannerman, Nicholas M. Bell, John A. Lee, Thad C. Harris and Robert A. Duley went to the silver representatives and not only volunteered contributions out of their own pockets, but said that to-morrow they would call upon the merchants and business men to raise a fund to assist in defraying the expenses of the convention.

Said Sergeant-at-Arms Doud of the Silver convention: "The silver people are the ones coming to town most able to bring money here to spend. Besides the majority of them come from the West and sections of country whose trade St. Louis has been and is making a great effort to cultivate and secure. It seems to me that they should be met in a more liberal spirit.

"Secretary James Cox of the Citizens' Committee said the other day that they had not invited the Silver convention here. He is mistaken. I am sure the convention was urged to come here by Mr. Clark H. Sampson, chairman of the committee. There seems to be a concerted spirit here in certain classes to throw cold water on the Silver convention, and the purpose is easily to be discerned. It is because the convention is going to instruct for Bryan."

He Intends to Make a Hard Fight for Control of the House of Representatives.

Special to The Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., July 18.—There is plenty of evidence now on the surface to show that the principal battle in Missouri that will be waged at the approaching election will be over control of the General Assembly. Much as Republican politicians talk about carrying the State, few of them believe that anything of the kind is possible. Mr. Filley is credited with being a candidate for the United States Senate, and it is believed that he will trade everything in sight to secure the prize he covets regardless of who else may sink or float.

It too often has happened in this State that the Democrats have lost sight of the importance of nominating strong men for the Legislature. The railroad corporations are always looking out to pick up pliant tools to send to the Assembly, and the last Legislature is a sample of what they can accomplish in this direction. Although it is believed that the extensive exposure made by the Post-Dispatch of the purchase of a majority of the members of the last Assembly will have a good effect in the future, yet the danger of allowing the legislative campaign to go practically by default is recognized by far-seeing politicians.

The good work of the Post-Dispatch in warning the Democracy against sending men to the Legislature to do the bidding of a brazen corporation lobby is apparent, even this early in the campaign, for half a dozen of the lobby tools of the last session have been defeated in the primaries.

The State Senate is composed of thirty-four members and the Republicans have ten hold-over members, with reasonable prospects of electing five more, which would leave the Senate composed of fifteen Republicans and nineteen Democrats, or just as it was two years ago. This condition is due to the fact that hold-over Republicans represent several districts that were never known to go Republican save in the landslide of 1894. The Buchanan County district is represented by a Republican, as is also the Sixth, composed of the counties of Adair, Chariton, Linn and Sullivan; the Twelfth, composed of Clark, Knox, Lewis, Putnam, Scotland and Schuyler, and the Fourteenth, composed of the counties of Camden, Cooper, Howard, Moniteau and Morgan.

The reliable districts in which vacancies occur that under all ordinary circumstances ought to be filled by Democrats, are composed of the following counties.

Third—Andrew, Clay, Clinton, De Kalb and Platte.

Fifth—Jackson County.

Ninth—Boone, Macon and Randolph.

Eleventh—Audrain, Lincoln and Pike.

Thirteenth—Marion, Monroe, Ralls and Shelby.

Fifteenth—Benton, Hickory, Pettis and Saline.

Seventeenth—Cass, Johnson and Lafayette.

Twenty-first—Bollinger, Butler, Cape Girardeau, Carter, Ripley and Wayne.

Twenty-third—Scott, Stoddard, Mississippi, New Madrid, Dunklin and Pemiscot.

Twenty-seventh—Cole, Maries, Miller, Osage, Phelps and Pulaski.

The Democrats have seven holdover Senators and they have heretofore carried the Thirty-first (St. Louis) District and the Seventh (Kansas City) District. There is a vacancy in the Thirtieth (St. Louis) District which is believed to afford a fighting chance. Even with the most indifferent management and good nominations the Senate ought to remain Democratic. Some of the districts named have made exceptionally strong nominations, such as Anderson of Boone in the Ninth, Major of Pike in the Eleventh, McClintic of Marion in the Thirteenth, Drum of Bollinger in the Twenty-first and Marshall of Scott in the Twenty-third.

It is believed Mr. Filley and his cohorts will wage their principal battle to capture the House and not waste much ammunition on the Senate. The Democratic counties carried by the Republicans in 1894 show where the battleground will be. They are: Atchison, Barry, Bollinger, two districts in Buchanan, Butler, Carroll, Clark, Cooper, Daviess, Howell, Iron, two districts in Kansas City, Jefferson, Johnson, Linn, McDonald, Montgomery, Morgan, Nodaway, Pettis, Phelps, St. Clair, Schuyler, Texas, Washington, Wayne. This does not take into account the fifteen St. Louis districts, but it otherwise shows where the Republicans hope to gain twenty-eight members of the Lower House on Democratic territory. Nominations are being rapidly made now and Democrats who do not want to see Mr. Filley go to the United States Senate may well keep their eyes open.

ENCOURAGING IN NEW YORK.

There Is Strong Hope for Silver in the Empire State.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Investigation made throughout the State with regard to the political outlook shows some encouraging results for the cause of free silver.

Edwin Fleming, editor of the Buffalo Courier, says: "I think it is safe to say that a majority of those actively associated with what is called the regular Democratic organization in this city and county will support the Chicago ticket."

John F. Nash, editor of the Syracuse Courier, says that his paper has not bolted the ticket, though it criticized the platform. It will not support a third ticket.

The Young Democracy of Onondaga County says: "James K. McGuire, the boy Mayor, who is a strong silverite, stands so well with the leaders in the West that he has received pressing invitations to stump Iowa in behalf of the ticket. He refused, but will conduct an ardent campaign in this county, and will have as lieutenants some of the brightest and ablest men of the younger element in the party. He says that he has learned from the best sources that about nine-tenths of the voting Democrats of Syracuse are in sympathy with the ticket and platform, and that his course is clear."

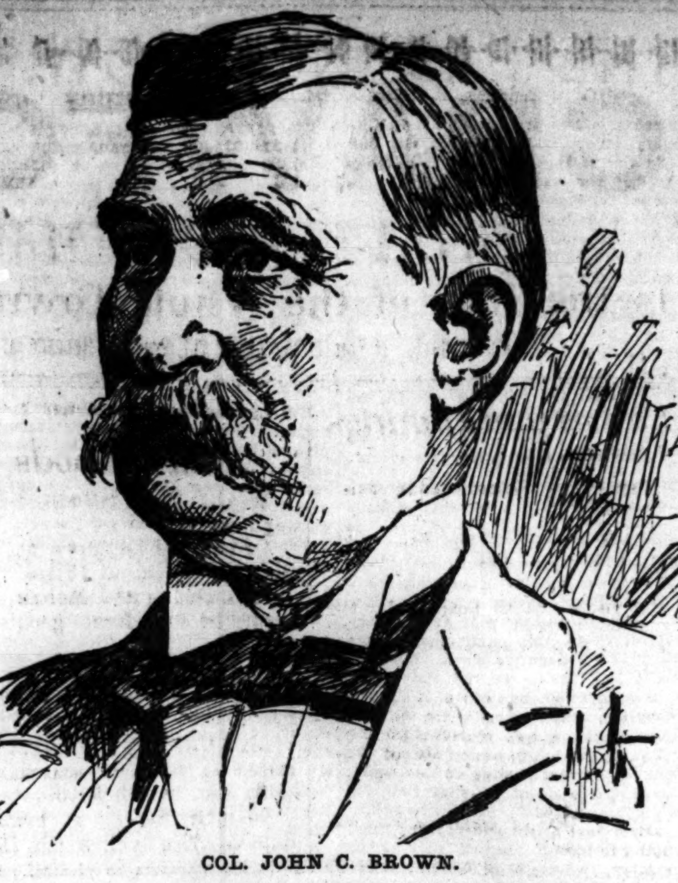
In Watertown and the country around the Democrats are as yet unsettled. Should such leaders as Hill and Whitney favor a bolt by the State convention of the Chicago ticket and platform, their action would be indorsed by a large following in that vicinity. It cannot be said, however, that a majority of the Democrats would approve of such a course. Most of them who are dissatisfied with the Chicago platform will not vote for McKinley and Hobart, but prefer to stay at home election day, or simply ignore the national electors and vote the remainder of the Democratic ticket. If Senator Hill decides to support the Chicago ticket, many Watertown Democrats will follow his course.

The silver sentiment has struck the farmers and secured a grip on them in Jefferson and St. Lawrence Counties. At least 90 per cent of the Democratic farmers and 50 per cent of the Republican farmers will vote the silver ticket.

At Gouverneur a silver club of 150 members has been organized and only 40 of them are Democrats.

In Rochester the feeling and belief is that a movement led by Hill and Whitney at the next Democratic State Convention to repudiate the Chicago platform and nominees would not receive the support of any Democratic organization in that county. The leaders of both factions are already on record against a bolt. They are rivaling each other in exhibitions of party loyalty.

It is not national, but local, politics that controls the situation there. As soon as the result of the Chicago Convention was known the Aldridge Democrats, who were beaten in the last caucus and for delegates to the Saratoga Convention, thought they saw an opportunity to regain power, and declared themselves for free silver. In order to prevent the party organization from falling into their hands again the Cleveland Democrats, who are mostly in favor of sound money, declared themselves against a bolt and in favor of the Chicago platform and candidates. It was this motive that led the delegates from that district to refuse to take any action during the convention that would in any way jeopardize the organization there. Both the party papers, which have fought for sound money, have taken the same position.



COL. JOHN C. BROWN.

The Ray County Candidate for State Auditor.

Col. Brown of Ray County is a native-born Missourian and has been prominently identified with the Democratic party for years. He has been honored by his home county repeatedly for public offices and was elected a member of the State Central Committee at the Pertle Springs Convention. He is an uncompromising advocate of the free coinage of silver at 16 to 1.

BRYAN AND SILVER.

Both Popular With Workingmen of the East.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—The following interviews with representative men in the labor movement indicate their opinions on the political situation:

J. S. O'Brien, member of the Executive Board of the Housesmiths' and Bridgemen's Union: My opinion is that we should have free coinage of silver at 16 to 1; this is a nation of great area, and as the Bank of England virtually makes the price of gold, we ought to be able to fix the value of silver.

George F. Eifert, delegate of the Compact Labor Club of Marble Cutters: I am not only for Bryan, but I shall take an active part in the campaign by joining my district organization and working for the ticket.

Kiernan Daly, delegate of the Derrickmen's Union: "I will vote for Bryan and Sewall; they are the only true representatives of the plain people, and all workingmen belong to that class. With a few exceptions—non-committal men—our members are all for the new Democracy."

Michael Moran, delegate of the Machine Stone-Rubbers' Union: "No goldbug monopolists for me; I am in favor of the new Democracy."

Eugene Stubenrauch, delegate of Cement Masons' Union: "Bryan and Sewall, if elected, will give the working people better conditions. They are representative men of the people and stand on a platform that indicates the popular will."

P. Hennessy, delegate of the Carpenters and Joiners' Union: "Bryan and silver is the slogan for the workingmen in this campaign. Uncle Sam's silver dollar is the dollar of our daddies, and is good enough for me."

Benton County, Arkansas, Ratifies.

BENTONVILLE, Ark., July 18.—A ratification of Bryan and Sewall by the Democracy of Benton County was attended by hundreds of Democrats, free silver Republicans and Populists. A flag pole 110 feet high, mounted by a silver horseshoe, was raised. Stirring speeches were made by Senator James H. Berry, Congressman Dinsmore and others. The nomination gives universal satisfaction here.

Bryan-Sewall Club.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

MEXICO, Mo., July 18.—A Bryan and Sewall Club was organized here last night with a very large membership. Several Republicans joined and many more declared they were going to vote the Democratic ticket this fall.

REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGN.

How the Work Will Be Divided Between New York and Chicago.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., July 18.—Henry C. Payne, Wisconsin member of the Republican National Committee, who has returned from an important conference in Cleveland, says that the Chicago headquarters of the committee will be opened in a short time in the Auditorium building. Chairman Hanna will give his time between the New York and Chicago headquarters, but Chicago will be the main headquarters, as it is nearer the center of the political contest. New York will look after all campaign matters in the New England, Eastern and coast States, as far as Florida on the coast. Chicago will look after everything in the States of the Ohio, Mississippi and Missouri Valleys, and everything west and south to the Pacific coast, including Kentucky, Tennessee and Alabama.

All the literature of the campaign will be handled and sent out from Chicago. The committee proposes to make a strong fight. The members feel like making every effort possible covering the entire ground of the campaign as fully and thoroughly as it can be covered.

ELECTORAL VOTE PROBABILITIES

To the Editor of The Post-Dispatch.

Now that we have the candidates and platforms before us, it might be well to figure a little on the chances of electing a silver man or a goldbug.

Including Utah, there are 447 votes in the Electoral College, 224 being necessary to elect. I think it quite fair to credit McKinley with the following:

Connecticut	6	Ohio	23
Delaware	3	Pennsylvania	32
Massachusetts	15	Rhode Island	4
Maine	6	Vermont	4
New Hampshire	4	Wisconsin	12
New Jersey	10		—
New York	36	Total	155

The following list of States credited to Bryan, there seems to be no doubt of his carrying, provided the Populists and Silver Party endorse him:

Alabama	11	Idaho	3
Arkansas	8	Louisiana	8
Colorado	4	Mississippi	9
California	9	Missouri	17
Georgia	13	Montana	3
Nebraska	8	Texas	15
Oregon	4	Utah	3
Kentucky	13	Virginia	12
Nevada	3	Wyoming	3
North Carolina	11	Kansas	10
North Dakota	3		—
South Carolina	9	Total	191
Tennessee	12

The four votes of Washington might be added to this list, but I prefer to place them in the doubtful column.

The following may be clased as doubtful:

Illinois	24	Michigan	14
Iowa	13	South Dakota	4
Washington	4	West Virginia	6
Maryland	8		—
Minnesota	9	Total	97
Indiana	15

Out of these nine doubtful States, with their 97 votes, McKinley must get 70 votes to win, while Bryan only has to secure 29.

It must be borne in mind that Bryan has a fighting chance in seven of the twelve States credited to McKinley, as follows: Maine, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Ohio, Delaware, Wisconsin. With a campaign of education and the support of Populists and the labor organizations, the Republicans will have to work very hard for them.

On the other hand there are only six of the twenty-three States credited to Bryan that McKinley has any chance of carrying, namely: Kentucky, Tennessee, California, Missouri, Kansas and Wyoming.

To those who are familiar with the vote of, and feeling in the different States, it will be seen that Bryan's chance of carrying some of the States credited to McKinley is much better than McKinley's is to carry any of those credited to Bryan.

It must be admitted too, that Bryan's chance in Indiana, Michigan, Washington and South Dakota is much the best, and is just as good in Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, Maryland and West Virginia. As it stands now McKinley must carry Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan and some one or two of the other doubtful States having as many as seven votes or all the doubtful States except Illinois. In fact there are only three combinations of the doubtful States that will elect McKinley; while Bryan has only to get Illinois, Washington and South Dakota; Illinois and West Virginia; Illinois and Minnesota; or Maryland, Michigan and Indiana; Iowa, Indiana and Washington; or Maryland, Washington, South Dakota and Michigan; or Indiana, Minnesota, Maryland, Washington, South Dakota and West Virginia. There are still other combinations on which Bryan can win.

The Laclede County Convention Instructs for Lon V. Stephens for Governor—Results Elsewhere.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

LEBANON, Mo., July 18.—The Democrats of Laclede County met in mass convention at the Court House in this city at 1 o'clock this afternoon to elect delegates to the State Judicial and Congressional Conventions. The convention was called to order promptly at 1 o'clock by Hon. J. W. Farris, chairman of the County Committee, who in a few remarks indorsed Bryan and Sewall. Reference to the nominees at the Chicago convention were heartily applauded.

J. W. Ragland of Union Township was elected chairman of the convention and E. B. Kellerman secretary.

The following resolution and instructions, offered by Hon. J. W. Farris, were unanimously adopted with enthusiasm:

The Democrats of Laclede County, Mo., in mass convention assembled, express disappointment at the defeat of our townsman, Hon. R. P. Bland, for the Democratic nomination for President of the United States, but in the hour of the defeat of our personal candidate, we heartily indorse the action of the National Democratic Convention in adopting a wise, patriotic and thoroughly Democratic platform, and we commend it to the masses as a declaration of independence upon which all voters who oppose the single gold standard should unite to resist the aggressions of a wicked money power; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we indorse the nomination of Bryan and Sewall for President and Vice-President of the United States; that in William J. Bryan of Nebraska we recognize a Democrat of the school of Jefferson, Jackson and Bland, an able champion of the cause of free silver; a Democrat whose life has been in sympathy with the plain people and who, if elected to the presidency, will bring equality before the law to every citizen of the republic.

Resolved, That we believe it is the duty of every patriot who believes in a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, and who opposes the single gold standard to support Bryan and Sewall and the free coinage of silver.

Resolved, That we are in favor of the nomination of R. P. Bland for Congress, and hereby instruct delegates to the Congressional Convention to vote for him.

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Democratic party of Laclede County that Lon V. Stephens be nominated for Governor, Hon. A. H. Bolte for Lieutenant-Governor, Hon. E. C. Crow for Attorney-General, Hon. Frank L. Pitts for State Treasurer, Hon. A. A. Lesueur for Secretary of State and Hon. J. M. Seibert for State Auditor and that the delegates to the State Convention are instructed to vote accordingly.

Resolved, That the delegates to the Judicial Convention are hereby instructed to vote for Judge C. C. Bland for Judge of the St. Louis Court of Appeals.

Resolved, That we heartily indorse the administration of Gov. Stone, and commend him to the public as an able champion of Democratic principles.

Hon. J. W. Halliberton of Carthage was present in the interest of his friend, Judge Crowe, of Jasper County. After the adoption of the above instructions he was called for, and made a rousing speech of half an hour. He heartily approved the action of the Chicago convention, and predicted the election of Bryan and Sewall by an overwhelming majority. Every mention of the nominees and the platform of the Chicago convention was enthusiastically applauded.

Delegates were elected to different conventions as follows:

To the State Convention—W. P. Bowman, Sim Phillips, J. T. Bradshaw and J. W. Farris.

To the Judicial Convention, St. Louis District—E. B. Kellerman, L. F. Luthy, A. C. Gavan and Dr. W. F. Snodgrass.

To Congressional Convention—J. T. Bradshaw, J. W. Farris, W. P. Bowman, Sim Phillips and John R. Greenstreet. Alternates—J. M. Ragland, R. A. Holt, John Henson, F. M. McShane and W. W. Thomas. The convention adjourned at 2:40 o'clock. It was largely attended and harmonious and enthusiastic throughout.

STEPHENS WILL BE NOMINATED.

Claimed That He Will Have Four Hundred Votes in the Convention.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., July 18.—Ed T. O'Rear, Chief Clerk to Lon V. Stephens, State Treasurer, said this morning that the nomination of Mr. Stephens for Governor is now a certainty. Speaking of the gubernatorial situation, Mr. O'Rear said:

"The situation to-day is just this: Sixty-one counties have held conventions, electing 229 delegates. The counties of Cooper, Cole, Douglas, Iron, Lewis, Miller, Platte, Reynolds, Scott, Holt, Butler, Mercer, Saline, Bollinger, Randolph, Ozark Cape Girardeau, Maries, Mississippi, Howard, Dunklin, New Madrid, DeKalb, Ripley, Benton, Oregon, Crawford, Laclede, Vernon and Washington, making an even 100 votes, are instructed for Mr. Stephens for Governor. Of the remaining delegates seventy-six stand pledged to him, thirty-six non-committal, and eleven for Mr. Ball, seven of the latter representing his own county and are instructed. Six delegates are instructed for Mr. Waddill.

"Callaway County held township meetings to-day and in every township instructions were given for Stephens. The County Convention Monday will elect seven delegates to the State Convention and certainly instruct them for Stephens. This will give him 183 delegates out of a total of 236 elected.

"There are fifty-two counties and the city of St. Louis yet to elect 299 delegates. When the conventions have all been held Mr. Stephens will have a total of about 400 votes, and will, of course, be nominated on the first ballot. His nomination will be approved by every element, and he will be elected by 50,000 majority."

CALLERS ON M'KINLEY.

Numerous Visitors on Pleasure and Politics Bent.

CANTON, O., July 18.—The latest novelties in McKinley callers are groups of fifty little girls dressed in white, giving the Chautauqua salute with handkerchiefs from the top of a big wagon filled with hay, followed by a company of boys who give a mouth organ serenade.

Hon. Wm. M. Hahn of Mansfield, ex-member of the National Committee from Ohio; Abner McKinley of New York, a brother of the Republican presidential nominee; ex-Executive Committeeman Charles G. Dawes of Chicago and Max Pracht of Oregon were among the callers to-day. It is understood Mr. Hahn will be stationed at the Chicago headquarters and have to do with the campaign speech making in the direction of appointments and dates.

Perhaps one of the most significant interviews which has been published here is a statement from President M. D. Ratchford of the Ohio Mine Workers, who was in town to-day on mining business. In reply to a reporter of the Evening Repository as to whether the coal miners would support Eugene V. Debs for President, he said:

"As far as I have been able to ascertain, they will not. At a meeting of the National Mine Workers' Association, held recently in Columbus, a resolution indorsing Debs was voted down, as was also the third party movement. The miners are all for honest money and sound business principles, and they will not support any party who is averse to this."

HILL SPARRING FOR BREATH.

HIS POLICY OF SILENCE NOW FULLY EXPLAINED.

WOULD SAVE HIS BACON.

Opposed to Bryan, but Is Dubious About the Action of the State Convention.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Senator Hill's position with regard to the Chicago ticket and platform has become such a puzzle, and his continued silence casts such a doubt that the Evening Post published to-day in full the story of the conferences of the various New York Democratic sound money leaders. As a result of these conferences came Mr. W. C. Whitney's declaration yesterday against the Chicago ticket, and Major Hinckley's appeal to the Democrats of the State "to take no definite action until the assembling of the State convention."

The Evening Post's story, which is declared thoroughly reliable, is as follows:

When Senator Hill and Mr. Whitney left the Chicago convention after the nomination of Bryan they were determined to repudiate the ticket without delay and they believed that nearly all the New York delegates would join in the repudiation. Before they took the train from Chicago, however, they learned that the dominating element in Tammany Hall and several delegates from rural districts were talking about indorsing Bryan—the Tammany men because they wished to be "regular" and the rural delegates because they had been all along free silver men at heart.

On the way home Mr. Hill and Mr. Whitney agreed that the wisest policy under the circumstances was to keep quiet for awhile, talk with the men who were inclined towards Bryan and make the party united in a repudiation of the ticket. Mr. Hill, it is said, undertook to look after the men who usually obeyed the State machine, and Mr. Whitney was to use his influence on his friends in this city and elsewhere, especially on Tammany men, who for some time had been calling on him to come forward and be the Democratic Moses of New York State.

When, therefore, the two leaders reached their homes they refused to say a word about the national ticket and settled down to the work agreed upon. Mr. Hill and his lieutenants talked with the delegates from the interior of the State last Monday and Tuesday and Mr. Whitney put in considerable missionary work in this city. On Wednesday the leaders met at Mr. Whitney's house to compare notes, and Maj. Hinckley and Secretary Lamont were called in for consultation. Next day the result of the conference, as announced, was a continuation of the policy of silence. According to the authority mentioned above, this policy was decided upon because it had been discovered that the sentiment in favor of bolting the ticket was not so strong as the leaders had expected, and the conclusion was reached that it would be best to go on with the missionary work for a while longer.

Senator Hill, it is said, reported that while the silver element in the party in the State was insignificant and could be safely ignored, a large number of sound-money Democrats who had always stood by party nominations could not yet bring themselves to the idea of bolting. He therefore advised that nothing be done until the action of the St. Louis Populist Convention would convince all sound-money men of the character of the Bryan ticket and platform, and satisfy them that as Democrats they were not bound to support a Populistic combination.

Just what Mr. Whitney reported in regard to his branch of the work is not known, but it is known that he is disgusted with the declarations of certain Tammany leaders that Tammany would indorse the ticket. It is known, too, that he was restive under the newspaper criticism of his silence and the doubts expressed about his attitude toward the Chicago nominees. The Sheehan element in Tammany had been shouting "Whitney is with us," and predicting that he would join the "Regulars" in an effort to secure an indorsement of the nominees by the State Convention. Mr. Whitney did not like all this, and it is said that he told Mr. Hill that he was going to define his attitude publicly without further delay.

Mr. Hill advocated continued inaction, but, it appears, that he failed to convince Mr. Whitney, for on Thursday night the latter sent out his statement, declaring that under no circumstances would he vote for or aid the Bryan ticket.

Personally Mr. Whitney had nothing to lose by this course. He had no machine to manage, no political office in view, and had been working solely, according to his view, for the purpose of saving his party from destruction.

With Mr. Hill it was different. He was as much opposed to the Chicago ticket and platform as Mr. Whitney, but he had his political future to consider. He was by no means sure, it is said, that if he declared for a bolt, a majority of the State convention would indorse his declaration, and he would not care to risk the first defeat of his life in a State convention of the regular Democratic organization.

Such a defeat would mean to him nothing less than political extinction, and he [illegible] party [illegible] Tammany, would be glad to welcome a new leader. So he adhered to his policy of silence, went down to Normandie-by-the-Sea, and as a result of two days' hard thinking, produced the address to the Democrats of the State which Maj. Hinckley gave to the public last night.

The meaning of the address, in view of the facts mentioned above, seems to be that the Senator is "sparring for breath;" that he wants time to make sure of his control of the State Convention, and that he will not declare his attitude towards the Chicago ticket until he is satisfied he will be with the majority of his party in the State.

A SOUND MONEY MEETING.

Democrats of Sangamon County Will Try to Organize a Bolt.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., July 18.—For some time past the sound money Democrats of this county and district have been agitating the calling of a Sound Money Democratic State Convention for the purpose of placing another State ticket in the field. The matter has been urged by local "bolters," headed by United States Senator John M. Palmer. The Senator, in conversation with the Post-Dispatch representative, stated that he did not believe a second presidential ticket would be named, nor would another National Democratic Convention be held. The idea was to literally bolt Bryan and Sewall, either by voting outright for McKinley or staying away from the polls.

That the "sound money" Democrats would place a second Democratic State ticket in the field he felt certain, and either Comptroller of the Currency Eckels, Ben Cable, Mr. Ewing of Decatur or some man of that character would be named for Governor. He feared the election of Altgeld and claimed Tanner would probably be defeated by the present Chief Executive.

The "sound money" Democrats of this county have issued a call for a meeting of the Sangamon County Democratic Sound Money Club to meet here July 21 "to formulate plans for arousing public interest for sound money." The call is signed by Lloyd Hamilton, President, and Edward Ridgely, Secretary. The club numbers about 100.

Gov. Altgeld and Chairman Hinrichsen of the State Central Committee both hold that no other State ticket will be named, although herculean efforts will be made to get some one to run. They seriously doubt if another State convention will even be held.

Sam Priest's Position.

Special to The Post-Dispatch.

MOBERLY, Mo., July 18.—Theodore F. Priest, Postmaster of Moberly, has received a letter from his brother, ex-Federal Judge H. S. Priest, devoted to the political situation. It is an argument against free silver, but does not advise a bolt. He speaks in high terms of Mr. Bryan and says Democrats cannot afford to vote for McKinley. Especially they should not take action that would result in turning Vest down and putting Filley in the United States Senate.

TIRED OUT.

A Common Condition Among American Women.

Women, especially housekeepers, are subject to a condition of body very fitly expressed as "chronic tired." It is not always because they are overworked, or because they have any distinct disease, nor yet because they do not take proper care of themselves, but doubtless each one of these contributes to the result. Some chronic difficulty peculiar to their sex, perhaps not very bad, but just enough to produce a continual nerve waste. This unfits them for the duties of the household which they must attend to. Too tired to eat well, too nervous to sleep well, they get deeper and deeper into the quagmire of discouragement.

Pe-ru-na is the remedy all such people need. It takes only a few doses to convince any woman that she has found exactly the remedy. It soothes the nerves while it strengthens them; it increases the appetite while it improves digestion; it gives tone and elasticity to the circulation. Discouragements vanish, despondency ceases. Thousands are saying, "Pe-ru-na has made a new woman of me." It is only necessary to take Pe-ru-na exactly as directed on the bottle. Such women may have a copy of Dr. Hartman's little book on diseases peculiar to women. Sent free by The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio. This book contains much information entirely new to most people.

Those who prefer to become regular patients of Dr. Hartman should send symptoms, duration of sickness and kind of treatment already received, when the Doctor will send them directions for treatment free of charge. All letters strictly confidential.

"WE ARE OPPOSED TO THE FREE COINAGE OF SILVER. * * * THE EXISTING GOLD STANDARD MUST BE PRESERVED."—Republican Platform.

A WOMAN'S PROBLEM.

It is but cold comfort the Woman Suffragists obtained from the political conventions this year. Whenever their representatives have appeared before a Resolutions Committee, asking some form of recognition, there has Mrs. Crannell of New York come also declaring that the great majority of her sex do not want the ballot.

It is proverbial in politics that the easiest way to defeat a man in a convention is to bring in a protest against him from his own town or county. No matter what his popularity may be, or how strongly he may have allied himself, through combination and trade with ruling elements in the body, such a protest, if at all respectable as to person or number, is nearly always fatal. Hundreds of good men have gone down before it. It is not logical. It is unscriptural. But, as Mr. Cleveland once said of Mr. Gorman, it "comes o'er the councils of the brave to blast them in their hour of might."

And Mrs. Crannell is yet young. In the ordinary course of nature she is good for eight or ten more national conventions. Here is a problem for the Woman Suffrage party greater than any confronting either of the old organizations.

If Mrs. Crannell will not accept a Presidential nomination from the Woman Suffrage party, the case is hopeless.

EVIDENCE IN DIVORCE SUITS.

That is an interesting decision of the Kansas Supreme Court that, under the law of that State, neither husband nor wife can testify against the other in a divorce suit or in a suit for alimony. And the decision would be as important as interesting but for the fact that it is based on a defect in a statute which the next Kansas Legislature will remedy.

Such a decision should not rest upon a technicality. Since courts have become more averse to decreeing divorces on default of defendants, parties to a contemplated legal separation not justified in law or morals have adopted the expedient of going into court and swearing each other out of the matrimonial state. So flagrant has this abuse become that many judges, in granting decrees, have not hesitated to express their belief that the evidence under which they were forced to act was the result of collusion.

A law making both parties to a divorce suit incompetent as witnesses might be too sweeping, and in some cases might operate to defeat the ends of justice. But there can be no doubt that judges should be vested with larger discretionary powers than they now have as to receiving or rejecting such testimony.

A GREAT INVASION.

The total number of immigrants reaching this country from Europe during the year ending with June 30, 1896, was 343,267. Last year the total immigration was 258,536. The increase during the year was 84,731.

It is significant, as affecting the lab[illegible] problem, that of the 343,267 immigrants 212,466 were males. It is further significant, as illustrating the inadequacy of present immigration restriction laws, that out of this great total only 2,010 were returned to Europe as paupers, and only 776 as contract laborers.

If it were possible, under any conditions, for high tariffs to maintain the wages of labor, how could wages be maintained in the face of such a pouring in of foreign labor as these figures disclose? The pretense of tariff protection to labor is only a pretense at best, but it becomes a fraud under conditions such as these and under a law so easy of evasion.

The Chicago platform demands a stronger law and a vigorous enforcement of such measures as may be adopted to protect American labor against these invading armies.

BRYAN'S SPEECHES.

Last week Mr. Bryan made twenty-one speeches, all of them extemporaneous. The conviction they have left in the public mind is that the designation of "Single Speech Bryan" so frequently reiterated since the Chicago convention, is not only unjustified, but ridiculous.

Nowhere has Mr. Bryan failed to sustain in his off-hand speeches the high thought and purpose which animated his great address in the Coliseum. Every one of these, called out by the inspiration of the moment or the occasion, will compare favorably with the doorstep or car platform efforts of Mr. Harrison in 1888 and since, which the Post-Dispatch frankly admits are models of compact, forcible and felicitous expression. Mr. Bryan is the only one of our public speakers who can rival the ex-President in that style of oratorical deliverance, and in adroitness, grace and aptness of speech the comparison is certainly not unfavorable to the younger orator.

Mr. Bryan's speeches at Salem, Kansas City and Lincoln were the three more pretentious efforts of the week. Those at Salem and Kansas City were patriotic, but partisan. In the one at Lincoln the candidate was lost in the citizen. The Lincoln speech is filled with the sentiment of home and friends. It caught the spirit of people who had come to honor the man who had brought honor to that city and State. And being almost a complete departure from the lines of thought in his previous addresses, it marked the facility of the great orator.

Although the campaign is only begun, it is already evident that Mr. McKinley is outclassed in that line of political effort which, in a candidate, appeals so powerfully to public admiration, sympathy and support.

BUYING ON INSTALLMENTS.

A correspondent writes the Post-Dispatch warning its readers against the practice of buying goods on the installment plan, and as a general proposition his argument is sound. It is a good thing to keep out of debt, and to make a habit of buying on installments is both foolish and dangerous.

It cannot be denied, however, that the ability to purchase on easy terms goods which may be necessary to health and comfort has in many cases been of great benefit to people of moderate means.

There are cases where young couples wish to marry and ought to marry, but could not do so in decency and comfort without resorting to the installment plan of setting up housekeeping. A man may desire to buy a lot in the suburbs, or a farm, and it may be possible for him to do so on the installment plan, beginning at once, and thereby cheering himself with the sense of proprietorship. It is a method of saving, and a great inducement to saving, and if the person who engages in it is steady and industrious the chances of completing the purchase are in his favor. If he were compelled to wait until he had actually saved the full purchase money he would probably never make a beginning.

Occasionally a poor family will find itself short of such necessaries as blankets at the beginning of a severe winter. To buy such things outright is beyond their means, and without the installment method of purchasing they must sacrifice comfort, and perhaps health.

Keep out of debt if you can, but don't deny yourself and your family reasonable comforts for a prejudice.

THE M'KINLEY BONDS.

Ex-Secretary of the Treasury Foster has been dragged into the defense of McKinleyism. The argument that the closing years of the Harrison Administration proved that high tariffs cannot increase revenues or protect Treasury gold reserves has been vigorously urged ever since the St. Louis convention. Its effect has been such that Harrison's unfortunate Secretary of the Treasury has been ordered into the breach in the McKinley line.

"Calico Charley" begins by telling the truth and making a fatal admission. He admits that he was on the point of issuing bonds before the end of Harrison's term, but he insists that it was only to meet the threatened danger of a drain of gold through the issuing of coin notes for silver bullion under the Sherman law. There was plenty of general revenue, he insists.

The official figures tell a different story. The receipts from customs during the fiscal year ending July, 1890, were $229,668,585. In October, 1890, the McKinley law, greatly increasing tariff duties, became operative. Instead of increasing, it decreased revenues. The fiscal year ending July, 1891, showed total customs receipts of $219,522,205, or $10,000,000 less than the previous year. The second year of McKinleyism was even more fatal to public revenues, for the total customs receipts during the year ending July, 1892, were $177,452,964, or a loss of over $42,000,000 in revenue from customs in one year.

In 1890 the total revenue was $403,080,983. In 1891 it had fallen to $392,612,447, and in 1892 to $354,937,784. The falling off would have been much greater but for the increase in internal revenue receipts, which gave the Government $23,000,000 more in 1892 than in 1889. But, even with this help, the excess of revenue in the Treasury over ordinary expenditures fell from $85,040,272 in 1890 to $26,838,542 in 1891 and to $9,914,454 in 1892.

Mr. Foster admits the preparation for a bond issue under the McKinley law, but he does not explain it as well as the official figures do.

No tariff law can protect the gold in the Treasury so long as gold is given a fictitious value.

THE FALL OF SLUPSKY.

It is now nearly five years since the editor of the Post-Dispatch brought Col. Abe Slupsky to the attention of the country as a Filley Republican standing for school reform in the city of St. Louis. Mr. Dana of the New York Sun, and in fact the entire press of the country, saw in Slupsky a man worth looking after. As a result, Slupsky awoke one morning to find himself famous.

His meteoric dash across the heavens aroused the envy and resentment of smaller men. He was forced to fight in defense of his laurels. And so long as he remained true to the great principle of school reform victory perched upon his banner. Again and again his enemies went down before his manly arm. But Slupsky, in the glory of the battle, forgot his mission. He lost sight of school reform and began to fight for unworthy things and causes. While the St. Louis School Board was openly violating the law and defying the Supreme Court, Slupsky, forgetting the high trust that had been reposed in him by the people of this country, was winning inglorious victories in hotel bar-rooms by knocking out delegates to the McKinley convention.

Though fortune favored him long after he had turned his back upon duty, justice in the form of a barkeeper has overtaken him at last. The story is told in the brief sentence: "The redoubtable Abe was not in it at any stage of the proceedings and was hammered within an inch of his life."

Had Slupsky been true to his mission no man could stand before him.

A Model Platform.

From the Mexico (Mo.) Intelligencer.

The national Democratic platform is a model of clear-cut English. Its meaning cannot be misinterpreted and every paragraph is a clarion note. It was written by Col. Charles H. Jones of the Post-Dispatch.

An Invocation Hymn.

The invocation hymn for the Christian Endeavor Convention was written by Col. John Hay, and, in the opinion of many who have seen it, it will become popular as a hymn at all such gatherings. It is as follows:

INVOCATION.

Lord, from far-severed climes we come,
To meet at last in Thee, our home.
Thou, who hast been our guide and guard,
Be still our hope, our rich reward.

Defend us, Lord, from every ill,
Strengthen our hearts to do Thy will
In all we plan, and all we do,
Still keep us to Thy service true.

Oh, let us hear the inspiring word
Which they of old at Horeb heard,
Breathe to our hearts the high command,
"Go onward, and possess the land!"

Thou who art light, shine on each soul!
Thou who art truth, each mind control!
Open our eyes and make us see
The path which leads to Heaven and Thee.

THE PASSING SHOW.

An impression has prevailed that in Chicago every fellow is looking for the best of it, and the stranger within its gates is likely to get the worst of it. There are people who believe that if they were to drop a silver dollar while walking along the streets it would never reach the pavement—some expert Chicago money grabber would catch it on the fly. An idea has obtained that every real Chicagoan believes in the advice the canny Scot gave his son: "Get money, my son, honestly if you can—but get money." Even the perspicacious Chief Desmond confesses to a feeling of uneasiness all the time he was in the Windy City lest peradventure the famous long man and short man should secure his wad and diamonds.

And now see how a whole community may be basely maligned. A recent episode proves that the Chicago people are the honestest that ever happened. They are so honest that they dispute with the stranger even to a point of committing a breach of the peace, rather than the latter should be loser in dealing with the natives.

And of all times, this particular episode occurred during convention week. A stranger bought two tickets to the convention for $5 and received change out of a $10 bill. The money got mixed up with his roll and he insisted that he had received $10 too much. The ticket seller swore stoutly he had given the correct change and no more. Each accused the other of prevaricating, and the dispute waxed so hot that a policeman was only just in time to prevent them from coming to blows. He took both to the police station, where a Solomonic police lieutenant settled the dispute by dividing the money between the two disputants. What a beautiful picture is here presented. The Chicagoan insisting on taking no advantage of the unsophisticated stranger; the stranger fearful that the Chicagoan will inadvertently rob himself; the police officer satisfying both in pocket and conscience. How different from all preconceived ideas of the city by the lake. Truly, Billy Desmond's fears were unfounded. Diogenes died all too soon. If he had lived in these days his search for an honest man were not in vain.

And now comes a new cult of cranks in London who contend that man is a fruit eater by nature, and that by adhering to a fruit diet man can live 200 years. They go beyond the vegetarians, and although not condemning the eating of vegetables as vehemently as the eating of flesh, yet they would have man return to the strictly frugivorous instincts he had in the dim past. But one thought seems not to have been considered by these diet reformers. Who wants to live 200 years? Are not there trouble, and tears and heartaches enough in three score years and ten without prolonging the agony? Does not the book say, "Yet man is born unto trouble as the sparks fly upward?" And again, "Man that is born of a woman is of few days and full of misery?" Then why seek to double his days and his troubles at the same time?

Apropos of this subject, once upon a time Dr. Homan, then the Health Commissioner of St. Louis, was descanting upon the advance made in medical, surgical and sanitary science, whereby the mortality rate in cities was being reduced and the average longevity extended, results largely due to the enforcement of sanitary regulations among those who dwell in tenements, and the improved system of quarantining against contagious diseases, and preventing by proper isolation and disinfection the spread of such diseases when the barriers of quarantine proved unavailing to keep them out.

But in the midst of the admiration of the advances made by modern science, one quiet chap, whether cynic or real humanitarian could not be determined, remarked: "Doctor, you men of science remind me of a cat playing with a mouse. You prolong life that the living may suffer and sin and endure the longer. Would it not be more merciful to let them die in their cheerless dens as soon as possible—the sooner the better?"

Death naturally reminds one of insurance. Attention was called in these columns recently to the tremendous boom in cyclone insurance after the late tornado, although this boom smacked of locking the stable door after the horse had been stolen. And now a brand new lead in insurance has been struck. Heretofore no man ever dreamed of insuring himself against death or injury by lightning, cyclone, tornado or plain wind storm without twister trimmings. As a matter of fact, accident policies expressly excluded death or injury from such causes. And the chances of being struck by lightning were so very remote that no man ever thought of covering the risk by special policy. But the cyclone led to just such a special line of insurance, and at least while the scare of the recent visitation lingers there will doubtless be policy holders. Thus does every condition evoke new enterprises and industries.

But speaking of unique insurance, France has a system in some of the manufacturing towns which is the most curious of all. Yet the idea it is based on is worthy of consideration. It is a standard joke, if a grim one, that the man who insures his life must needs die to beat the game. But then he can live to a ripe old age and beat the game at last—provided the company does not fail. In this new French plan, however, it does not pay to live too long. The longer the assured lives the less his heirs get on his death. Thus a certain premium will secure the payment of $1,000 if the assured dies before he is 38 years old. If he lives to be 50 his heirs will receive only half that sum, and so the longer he lives, and the more he pays in premiums, the less the beneficiary receives. The basic theory is that a man's life is insured to protect his family when the bread-winner is removed. A man dying at 40 is likely to leave a helpless family of infants. At 50 his children are more likely to be able to take care of themselves. At 60 they are likely to be husbands and wives, entirely independent of parental aid. A man might live long enough, and pay enough in premiums to forego all benefits at his death. The company could afford to furnish free of charge the best medical attention obtainable in order to keep their policy holders alive as long as possible. But one thing in the scheme is overlooked. No provision is made for the old bachelor who marries late in life, or the irrepressible widower who takes several wives in succession. It seems to be pre-supposed that every man will marry young, and not more than once.

The news comes that although the experiment with it failed in our army, compressed food was used with satisfactory results in the recent British expedition to Ashantee. Here is food for thought as well as for soldiers. It is to be hoped this success will not lead to the introduction of condensed food into the daily lives of civilians, else most of its joys will be departed. The imagination revolts at the picture of a banquet at which half a dozen courses should be disposed of by swallowing as many small pellets like liver pills. The small boy and the married man who are pressed into service by mother and wife to carry the big market basket which grows heavier at every step home from market on Saturday might congratuate themselves on their emancipation in the day when the family dinner can be carried home in a pill-box. But half the joys of the housewife's life would be gone if she could no longer chaffer with the green grocer and the butcher. There would be no more carrying of unwieldy hampers to picnics, no more mingling together of the pickles, the preserves and the butter in one common mess; no more feminine shrieks at the traditional toad, and the army of ants without which no dinner under the trees is complete. Every one would swallow his or her pellet and there would be no spread under the trees, and no intruding frog. But there would be no fun at that picnic. The subject is too full of awful possibilities to pursue further, except to suggest that the British soldiers in Ashantee overlooked a bet. What horrible execution they could have done among those naked savages by just leaving a few thousand meal pellets where the untutored black men could get at them. More deadly than bullets or young brides' biscuits would have been the result. The victims would have died of apoplexy and kindred disorders in great numbers, with stomachs distended, as the condensed food spread itself out, like so many poisoned pups. Imagine their surprise when the harmless looking pellets should begin to swell. The man can appreciate it who ever took just a wee little chew of tobacco on entering church, and then got wedged in between a couple of ladies where he was afraid of the results of swallowing it, and could not spit. He can tell you how small things can become puffed up.

With the adoption of bloomers, sailor hats, man's collars and neckties and man's avocations, it is a natural sequence that the new woman should adopt man's prevarications and excuses. So it came about the other night that when Mrs. Van Sickler of New York did not go home till morning, till daylight did appear, she promptly told her questioning and angry husband that she had been "sitting up with a sick friend." How many thousands of men have offered up this time-honored excuse and become virtuously indignant if it was not accepted without question. Does not woman get sick? And is it not meet her friend should sit up with her? Yet was Mr. Van Sickler incredulous and suspicious. He wanted to kill the wife of his bosom for offering the excuse she had borrowed from man. But she beat him to the police station and was protected. Mr. Van Sickler's wrath was tempered, but, still unconvinced, he declared his belief that he was being "monkeyed with." What is sauce for the gander should be sauce for the goose, too, reversing the old saw. Mrs. Van Sickler is only the advance guard. Soon we may expect to hear all the stereotyped excuses of man proceeding from the mouth of woman. "Detained at the office," "Got a telegram to leave town," "Got an appointment with a business man," "Behind with my books, must go back to the office after supper," etc., etc. She should be able to deliver these with great aptness in 1900, when man is permanently relegated to the rear, seeing the thousands of times she has heard them and had to accept them in default of proof that they were fraudulent.

The Grand-jury is going to investigate Jailer Wagner and try to ascertain the whyness of the which appertaining to jail deliveries.

Some of the members are of the opinion that there are other bars to which Louie pays more attention than to his jail bars, and they believe, naturally, that this fact operates as a bar to good management of the city bastile.

Some of them even go so far as to intimate that Louie was practicing before the rail when Murderer Noble Shepard flew the coop.

The Grand-jury cannot be too careful in taking up this important matter. It has never been charged that there are snakes in the jail, but it is full of "bugs," and it now develops that it is overrun with rats.

They have tasted the blood of Duestrow and drank the succulent corpuscles from the veins of Maud Lewis. They nibbled on Dollie Mitchell until she prayed to be transferred to the Work-house. Two thousand of them attacked a score of workmen in a sewer, and a terrible battle was waged. The prisoners live constantly in a state of mortal fear.

Is it not more than likely that, when Noble Shepard entered the sewer for the purpose of escaping, the rodents pounced on him and tore him limb from limb and carried his pants outside, where they were found?

In the absence of positive evidence to the contrary the grave and reverend seigniors of the Grand-jury should give Louie the benefit of the doubt.

THE LOOKER ON.

The Greatest Orators.

From the New York Recorder.

The greatest orators have always prepared their orations with care. Some prepare in one way, some in another. The great Edward Everett, the finest orator Massachusetts ever produced, used to commit his orations to memory and practice the delivery of them before a looking-glass. They remain to this day among the masterpieces of the English language. Edmund Burke prepared in similar fashion, and no greater master of the art of public speech has ever appeared in England.

The Personal Abuse of Bryan.

From the New York Recorder.

There is some danger that personal abuse of Bryan will be overdone and defeat its own object. The effort to make him ridiculous because of his posing as "the boy orator" is itself ridiculous. If persisted in it will help Bryan instead of hurting him. This nickname was given to him many years ago, when he was, indeed, a very young man. It has stuck to him ever since, just as Henry Clay used to be called "the mill boy of the slashes," and Gen. Nathaniel P. Banks "the bobbin boy of Waltham," long after they had become mature statesmen. It was nothing to their discredit that they were thus nicknamed by ardent admirers, and it is nothing to Bryan's discredit that he should have been similarly treated.

No Change Now.

From the Moberly (Mo.) Monitor.

There must be no change. Lon V. Stephens has made the race for Governor. He has won fairly and squarely. He offered early in the day or spring to quit if Hackaday would make the race. He then offered before the convention at Chicago to declare in favor of Bland. It is now too late to go back and pull Lon down. He is the favorite. He can carry our State [illegible]. A change now will mean defeat.

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE.

Bland for Congress.

To the Editor of The Post-Dispatch:

It does seem as if the St. Louis Republic was bereft of reason when it comes to the discussion of Missouri politics. It is but a few weeks since it was the subject of denunciation by numerous county conventions, and narrowly escaped positive censure by a State Democratic convention, which showed its displeasure at the Republic's abuse of Democratic leaders by honoring them in every way in its power. Notwithstanding all this, here comes this purblind, would-be leader, to sow dissension in the ranks with the assertion that the party is in danger unless it nominates Richard P. Bland for Governor. I am a sincere friend of Mr. Bland. I went to Chicago and worked to secure his nomination for President, but I, as one Democrat, resent the imputation that Missouri Democracy depends upon any one man for success. I love Mr. Bland, but I should respect him less than I do if he were made of such poor stuff that he would permit himself to be used by the enemies of Mr. Stephens, who has been one of Mr. Bland's best friends and the principal organizer as to details of the silver forces of the State.

It is not that the Republic loves Bland more, but Stephens less, that all this hullaballoo is raised. It was Stephens who sounded the keynote, "Put none but silver men on guard," which incensed the Republic, and now Mr. Bland must be used to wreak the personal spite of others upon his friend and supporter. Dick Bland does not often make mistakes and he will never fall into such a plain trap as this. It would be more honorable on the part of the Republic to come squarely out and abuse Mr. Stephens, as it did some weeks ago, but it has been bitterly taught the folly of that course, and knows it would result in Mr. Stephens' nomination by acclamation. "Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad." If the Republic is not mad all signs have failed, and mad people are never safe leaders.

Call off your dogs, Old 1808. The Democrats of Missouri are none too patient with you at best. They propose to nominate whom they please for Governor on August 5th next, and the loyal, sincere Democrats, who believe in silver coinage, and who are the genuine friends of Mr. Bland and the great cause of bimetallism will see to it that he is returned to Congress from the Eighth District to continue his courageous fight for the restoration of the white metal.

Mr. Bryan himself said in his speech the other day that Mr. Bland must go to Congress to aid the new administration in bringing about the enactment of a free coinage law. Is it possible that the Republic wants to cripple the silver cause by keeping Mr. Bland out of Congress?

In Unity Is Strength.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

Now that the Chicago Convention has nominated Bryan for President on a free gold and silver platform, what more do the Populists want? They are good for at least 2,000,000 solid votes, which means no small fish. I would consider it a bad break for the Populists to undertake to go it alone, as a third party, when the principles of the Chicago nominee are so akin to their interests. Why not ratify this nomination at the Populist Convention, on July 22, 1896? In unity there is strength. Individually we are weak.

This is a big jack-pot and the goldbugs are going to put up big stakes to win it and the stakes are too large to be won by a mere bluff. All kinds of schemes will be resorted to by the Money Power to gain these ends. Bribery is one; such as buying votes for a drink of whisky to so many dollars. Another method is to threaten employes of large manufacturing plants that in the event that they don't vote the employers' way they will lose their jobs and be in danger of starving to death.

With three parties in the field the Money Power will plant the next President. But the combination of the Democrats and Populists will spoil the little game and we can thereafter all get at least enough to eat.

A Ringing Platform.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

I read the Chicago platform with much pleasure, and it certainly has the ring of the Declaration of Independence. It is a noble document. Your bold way of meeting the abuse and denunciation of the gold press is very encouraging. Having no argument they resort to many sinister methods, but they are disgusting many sincere Republicans who will say little and vote for silver in the fall.

Buying on Installments.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch:

The impoverished and dependent condition of a vast majority of the toilers in large cities is due in a great measure to their buying on the installment plan. The temptations seem to be irresistible, and they do not apparently realize what it means to them, even after several experiences. By puchasing in this manner they mortgage the future, destroy their independence and place themselves and families in very dangerous position. Every man helps to elevate the character of the community in which he lives when he makes a successful effort to keep out of debt. When a man has a few dollars of his own, he is to a certain extent independent, but if his salary is mortgaged before he has earned it, how is it then?

Here is a proposition: A man buys a bill of goods on the installment plan for which he pays a nominal sum at the time and a stipulated amount weekly or monthly, as he is paid his salary. If nothing happens to upset his calculations, he finishes paying his installments and the goods belong to him. But no one knows the future, however bright the prospects may be. There are nearly always unexpected contingencies which should be guarded against. He may lose his situation through the failure of his employer or other cause; or the house he occupies and which contains the goods may burn, or sickness in his family may make it necessary to divert money to other uses. What will he do under such circumstances and what course will his debtor pursue? One who becomes a debtor not only pays the price of the commodity he obtains, but also an advance to cover the risk incurred in a transaction of this kind.

Some will argue differently, but those who have had experience will recognize the truth of the statement. If the working people would give this subject their serious consideration, they would be enabled to see that when they fall into the numerous temptations to accumulate debt it certainly takes away any incentive to save, which is the sure road to thrift and independence. "Pay as you go and if you cannot pay don't go," is a good motto and one which, if followed, would be the means of placing the toilers on an independent basis.

What Is the Soul?

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

The word soul, in a general sense, signifies the semi-material substance pervading all space and surrounding all corporal forms. The individual soul of man, which is the internal or real man, is a collected center of energy from this universal storehouse of primordial matter, being breathed upon by the spirit of God it is made a living soul and may be either mortal or immortal according to its conditions.

The body, generally considered the real man, because it is tangible therefore seemingly the most real, is not man, but simply the organic structure through which and by which the abstract principles of the soul radiates and are reflected. As the soul is made alive by the breath of the spirit or the activity of the Holy Ghost, the body, by serving the activity of the soul, is made alive.

Man can have but one soul, which may be mortal or immortal according to its own will, but the soul may have numerous bodies before [illegible] the fulness of the law is complete; for (it is written), "till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled."

St. Louis, July [illegible], 1896.

DELMONT'S MR. "A" OF WALL STREET.

MYSTERY THROWN ABOUT THIS FRIENDLY MAHATMA.

WM. J. H. BOWN ON THE RACK.

He Tells as Little as Possible About the Secrets of the Blind Pool, but Nice Points Crop Out.

Very slowly the history of Albert Royal Delmont's "blind pool" is being dragged out of witnesses in the office of Judge George W. Lubke in the Commercial building.

The good start made Friday when the depositions of William J. Kinsella and Luzerne J. Peck were taken, throwing considerable light on A. R. Delmont's methods, encouraged Lawyer A. N. Edwards to believe that he would learn much on Saturday of value to A. G. Edwards & Sons, his clients.

William J. H. Bown was the witness whom Mr. Edwards expected to assist him in recovering that $13,677 from Delmont and his speculation confreres, who include some of the stable wholesale merchants of the Cupples Block. No one enjoyed Delmont's confidence to such an extent as Bown, save perhaps Delmont's mysterious "friend" in Wall street. Mr. Bown was the alleged manager of Delmont's "blind pool," and was the person who interested St. Louis business men in Delmont's money making schemes, which at last proved such costly experiments.

The entire day was given over to the taking of Bown's deposition. When he was finally excused until Monday morning, he had failed to meet Mr. Edwards' full expectations, and had divulged very little of a tangible character regarding the "pool." In fact Mr. Bown insisted all through his deposition that it was not a pool.

The deposition, however, disclosed the fact that Delmont's mysterious Wall street friend was known as "A" to those who had dealings with Delmont and that his identity was kept so sacredly secret that even Bown was refused the privilege of meeting him. "A" appears to have been held in great awe by Delmont's circle of speculators and occupied something of the position of a Mahatma or Veiled Prophet. The latter is regarded as the most appropriate simile by those who dealt with Delmont, because the profit in their ventures was heavily veiled.

Bown was among the first to reach Judge Lubke's office yesterday morning. Attorney Edwards came in soon afterward. After Bown had been waiting about ten minutes for Attorneys Given Campbell, Dan Taylor and O. L. Mudd, representing the defense, a messenger arrived from the Long Distance Telephone Co., stating that Bown was wanted at the long distance telephone.

It was twenty minutes before Bown returned and it did not develop whether the person at the other end of the wire was Albert Royal Delmont or not.

Considerable mystery surrounds the whereabouts of Delmont, although Mrs. Delmont, who was Miss Belle Mulhall until last spring, is now in St. Louis. After the proceedings were adjourned yesterday afternoon, Attorney Mudd stated that he did not know where Delmont was, that he might be in New York, Chicago or any place else. Mr. Mudd stated Friday that he would comply with Attorney Edwards' request and have Delmont in St. Louis as soon as he was needed. Yesterday afternoon he stated that Delmont might or might not come to St. Louis, according to whether his presence was deemed advisable.

All the attorneys were in Judge Lubke's office when Bown returned from the long-distance telephone. The stenographer at once stationed himself at a small desk, Judge Lubke, as Special Commissioner, leaned back in a rocking chair, and the attorneys disposed themselves as suited their convenience. Attorney Edwards, conducting the examination, sat in a straight-back chair facing the stenographer.

The oath was administered Bown and he seated himself at the right of and facing the stenographer. During the greater part of the examination he rested his elbow upon the stenographer's desk, rubbing his chin almost incessantly. He fidgeted about in his chair and gave other evidences of extreme nervousness under the placid but steady and determined questioning of Mr. Edwards.

Bown is rather stockily built and has a double chin. He wears only a mustache. His hair is dark, but tinged with gray, and he is slightly bald. During the morning proceedings he was on the rack two hours, parrying Mr. Edwards' questions. Resuming the stand at 2 o'clock, he was plied with questions three hours longer and then the examination had not been completed.

The examination was begun by a request that Bown state the place of his residence, which he gave as Kirkwood. Then, in response to a question, he stated that during July or June, 1896, he conversed with Eugene S. Smith at Orange, N. J., relative to Delmont and his schemes. Smith seems to have been the only associate of Delmont acquainted with the identity of the stock plunger's Wall Street friend.

"I asked him whether Mr. Delmont was there," said the witness. "He said no, that he had left for Chicago. He asked when I arrived. I told him at about 6 o'clock, getting off at Newark, N. J. Smith then said: 'You passed him on the road.'

"I then told Smith that Delmont had made a transaction with Edwards & Co., which I did not understand. He replied:

"'Yes, Edwards & Co. have made a great bungle. They should have done what they promised. They were given an order to buy certain stocks. They bought part, but not all. They were compelled to buy all or none, to complete the transaction. There were sellers of those stocks ready for Mr. Edwards' buyers. Part of those stocks were bought and the sellers retired from their posts, leaving the other sellers at their posts awaiting Mr. Edwards' brokers' order to purchase them. They knew just where the stocks were going if the order was completed as telegraphed Delmont, but unless those stocks were purchased they presumed some one else had secured those intended for Delmont and their support was withdrawn.'

"I wish to state right here," said the witness, "that the whole transaction was in options on stock and not on outright purchases.

"Mr. Smith told me he knew nothing about the margins not having been put up. That was Delmont's business, and unless Edwards & Co. intended carrying out their promise, they should not have taken the order. The figures on one stock at that time were 24 and the orders were to bid it to 21, which would have been done, had Edwards & Co. done as they were told.

"Smith told me that he himself was simply the confidential friend of some one else, under orders the same as any clerk in our office would be.

"I asked Smith whether when he gave orders to buy options at a certain price, and those options were promised to advance to a certain price it would be done. He replied: 'Absolutely.'

"I said I had heard there was a very large sum in Delmont's hands.

"He said that if Mr. Delmont told me so, I could believe it.

"I told him I had received a telegram signed 'A,' which I presumed should have been signed 'E.' I had returned it to the telegraph company for correction. They had replied: 'A correct, and you will so report it.' Smith said: 'Why, that is from him, himself,' and seemed very much surprised.

"I then said to Mr. Smith that Mr. Knight of Edwards & Co. had returned from New York, bringing information about Delmont that was quite alarming, and that Mr. Edwards, thinking I might have influence with Delmont, asked me to go with him to New York to see Delmont.

"What Mr. Knight had reported was that in conversation with Delmont the latter had pulled out four keys, to which were attached four trunk checks, and that in his opinion a man taking a little trip to New York with his wife did not need four trunks.

"That part of the alarm was dissipated so far as I was concerned when Smith told me Delmont had gone to Chicago."

At this juncture the examination was directed toward developing Bown's connection with the pool and forcing an admission that he introduced Delmont to Edwards & Co. and vouched for him. These questions did not elicit very satisfactory replies and Mr. Edwards asked who was meant by Smith when he said "that telegram was from him, himself."

"He meant 'A,'" replied the witness.

"What did he say about 'A?'"

"He said 'A' was a very powerful source of information and his word was not to be questioned. I asked Smith if I could meet 'A.' He replied: 'Oh, no; you couldn't see him.'"

Bown denied having told Smith at Orange, N. J., that he was heavily interested in a pool of which Delmont was manager. He stated that he had introduced Delmont to Edwards & Co., believing him a good risk. He had received a note subsequently from George L. Edwards asking about Delmont's financial standing and stating that Delmont's accounts with the company were not in good shape at all. In reply he called at the company's office and stated that from statements he had seen made by Kohn & Co., Delmont was worth $150,000.

Witness then admitted that he had a subsequent interview with Delmont at Chicago.

"What was said at that interview?" inquired Mr. Edwards.

"I do not think that is any of your business," replied Bown.

Judge Lubke warned the witness that he must answer. Bown then said:

"Delmont was very angry at the sale of the stocks by Edwards & Co., and said it was a transaction which would not be recognized by the Stock Exchange of New York under its rulings. He said he had not been served with notice, and that had he been in St. Louis it would never have happened. He said he was under orders of his friend, who had called him to New York. All this had happened while he was on the train between Chicago and New York.

"I asked him then what he was going to do with the notice Albert Edwards had written out for us to sign. He said he never would sign it the way it was.

"I said I did not know what Edwards would do, but that Delmont might be arrested. I also said that I was very much surprised because while I was doing all I could to help Edwards & Co. to straighten things out, Albert Edwards was now turning on me. I told him both of us would probably be arrested.

"He said he wanted no trouble, and did not fear arrest."

At 1 o'clock the proceeding was adjourned for dinner. During the interval Attorney Edwards went to the Circuit Court and secured Judge Valliant's permission to amend the petition of A. G. Edwards & Sons by interlineation. The depositions taken Friday and that of Bown during the morning had developed that circumstances having an important bearing on the suit had occurred in 1895 and that the "blind pool" existed prior to the past six months which was the time limit originally set in the petition. The interlineation was accordingly an allegation that the co-partnership or "blind pool" had existed for twenty-six months, instead of six months, prior to the filing of the suit.

This amendment operated to admit testimony at the proceedings before Judge Lubke, covering events during 1895 and more particularly a meeting at the Mercantile Club, at which it was supposed the pool was formed. Before the proceedings were adjourned yesterday afternoon, Bown was asked about this meeting.

Before reaching this Mr. Edwards questioned Bown about a number of interviews between parties to the suit and statements alleged to have been made by them. The proceedings were resumed at 2 o'clock.

In response to a question from Mr. Edwards, Bown stated that he was present at an interview held on July 6, subsequent to his visit to Orange, N. J., in the cafe of the Northern Central Hotel, Chicago, at which the others present were Delmont and Albert N. and George L. Edwards, Albert N. Edwards being the attorney in the present proceedings. Witness stated that the Edwardses had presented a statement to Delmont and himself for signature. They refused to sign and witness denied that the statement as presented then was a correct one. The purport of the statement did not develop at the examination, but in further relating what took place at the interview witness said:

"Rather than have any trouble or publicity, I said I'd rather pay the amount out of my own pocket."

Bown denied that Albert N. and Geo. L. Edwards had said at the interview that they would accept no statement from Delmont and himself unless signed by Delmont, as he had made a number of false statements to Harry L. Knight, treasurer for A. G. Edwards & Sons.

He also denied that Delmont told him at the interview to sign the statement and when the pool was wound up to pay over to Edwards & Sons the amount of their loss. He admitted that after an hour's consultation he signed a certain paper, the nature of which did not develop, and that after the sale of stocks to Delmont and others, he offered to Edwards & Co. a promissory note signed by Delmont, which was accepted and receipted for by them, but afterward returned to Bown because it was not indorsed. The note was dated July 13, 1896, was for two months at 6 per cent per annum, and promised to pay A. G. Edwards & Co. $13,694.43 at their office in St. Louis.

The witness denied that he had stated at Chicago or at any other place at any time that he had been in a "blind pool" with his brother-in-law which had $340,000 to its credit, half of which amount belonged to Delmont. He had suggested to George Digby, after the interview at Chicago, that Digby raise $10,000 to give to Delmont with which to operate, Delmont to use his half of the profits in paying the indebtedness to Edwards & Sons.

Witness admitted in response to a query that on July 2 he was present at an interview between Harry L. Knight, A. N. Edwards, George Edwards and George Digby, in which witness had stated that $12,500 had been raised for Delmont to operate with and pay off the debt to Edwards & Sons with his half of the profits. Digby is a resident of Wheeling, W. Va., and is alleged to have been in the blind pool.

"I will ask you," said Attorney Edwards, "if it is not true that at that interview neither you nor Mr. Digby denied the liability of the members of the pool and said that was what you wanted to know?"

"Digby said that, not I," replied the witness.

Continuing witness said that on July 6 Edwards & Co. wanted Bown to indorse the note previously referred to. Bown refused to do so.

He admitted that he suggested that he mortgage his house to raise the money for the indebtedness, in order to avoid publicity.

After further questions on this line, Mr. Edwards got down to the meeting at the Mercantile Club. Several questions elicited the statement from Bown that the meeting was held in a private dining-room of the club in February or March, 1895. It was called by Delmont for the purpose of raising $10,000 to purchase options on stocks.

"Mr. Delmont said he had valuable information," testified the witness, "and we were assured that we would assume no responsibility in entering upon the venture, and if we lost it would be only what we put in. Some put in $500, some $300 and so on. The meeting, though, was a complete failure, and the $10,000 was not raised. Afterward those who had gone into it drew down their money."

Witness said he thought there was ten or twelve present at the meeting. He could remember only the names of Luzerne J. Peck, John H. McMahon, William Scott and Wm. J. Ricker.

Further questioning developed the fact that the signature of "E" to telegrams, figuring in the various stock transactions, represented Eugene S. Smith, and that Bown always furnished receipts for money entrusted to him for stock speculation through Delmont. He was asked to state the names of others besides those already mentioned, who had dealings with Delmont.

This brought out objections from Attorneys Campbell, Taylor and Mudd in unison, and by the time that Judge Lubke had decided that Bown must answer it was after 5 o'clock, and the proceeding was adjourned until 11 o'clock Monday morning, when Bown will resume the stand.

RADICALS IN HIGH FEATHER.

PARLIAMENT'S POOR SHOWING THEIR OPPORTUNITY.

LIBERAL CLUB CONFERENCE.

A Thorough Reorganization of the Party in London Will Be Considered.

LONDON, July 18.—The fourteenth parliament of Queen Victoria will close its first session on Aug. 14, after certain private, political and court measures shall have been disposed of. This programme, which has been decided upon by the Cabinet, springs from a desire to cut the gordian knot of the difficulties in which the government finds itself, throwing things over until time can be found for an effective reorganization of the political cohorts.

A more disastrous session than this, of which only ten real working days remain, has rarely been known in the history of any party having over 100 majority in the House of Commons. The educational bill withdrawn, the finance and agricultural rating bills passed and the Scottish rating bill tolerably sure to be passed, completes the record of first-class measures disposed of at this session. It has been deemed impossible to proceed with the deceased wife's sister bill, and the Irish land bill has no chance at this session, even if the House should enter upon all night sittings.

London, which was overwhelmingly Conservative at the last election, stands amazed and disgusted at the ridiculous outcome. All this fortifies the common belief that before the next session begins A. J. Balfour will retire from the Government leadership in the House of Commons, and take his seat among the Lords, leaving Joseph Chamberlain master of the Commons and the real head of the Conservative party's destiny.

The debility that has characterized the Government, has put the London Radicals in high spirits, and they have already begun seriously to trim their sails for the next election. Baron Tweedmouth has arranged a conference for representative politicians from all parts of the metropolis at the Liberal Club, on Monday next, to consider a through reorganization of the Liberal party in London.

The House of Lords has advanced a stage the vexatious actions bill, which is being quietly smuggled through Parliament. The measure is designed to protect the Chancellor and the Speaker and their servants from cranks who bring unsuccessful action and leave the defendants to pay the costs. Baron Haalsbury, speaking in support of the bill, read a list of over thirty actions instituted against himself and his colleagues for alleged neglect of duties, by the same plaintiff and in which plaintiff always failed to make out his case. The bill provides that in future persons desiring to institute such actions shall be required to obtain permission from the high court before they can sue. The radical press howls at this as class legislation, but such law is absolutely needed.

The air, figuratively speaking, is full of ceremonies of unveiling busts and monuments and of other posthumous honors. In addition to the memorial to Hemings and Condell the first publishers of Shakespeare's collective writings, unveiled this week, Dean Bradley of Westminster Abbey, unveiled a bust of Dr. Thomas Arnold, the famous headmaster of Rugby; the Duke of Norfolk unveiled a life-sized statute of Cardinal Newman, outside of the Brompton oratory, and busts of Cardinal Manning and Thomas Hughes were also unveiled. Next week the Prince of Wales is to unveil the new statue of his mother, the Queen, at the foot of Black Friars bridge.

The Robert Burns Centenary Exhibition was opened at the Institute of Arts in Glasgow on Wednesday. They are showing an interesting collection of books, manuscripts, relics, portraits, etc., of the famous poet. At the Burns Centenary at Dumfries on Tuesday next an address will be delivered by Lord Rosebery.

Now that the sale of the paintings and other effects of the late Sir Frederick Leighton is over the executors of the estate of the deceased President of the Royal Academy are glad that they did not effect the proposed sale of the collection to the nation. The executors were then willing to accept £35,000 ($175,000) for everything, but at the auction sales which have just closed there was realized almost £40,000 ($200,000), which brings the total proceeds of the Leighton estate up to nearly $500,000.

The last appearance of the De Reszke brothers in "Tristan and Isolde" drew an enormous crowd, and Jean De Reszke had a veritable ovation. His horse, Matador, has just won the derby at Wassowa, worth 100,000 roubles, also receiving at the hands of the Grand Duke Sergius a valuable trophy.

The Field devotes a page of this week's issue to a spiteful review of the Henley regatta. The article begins with a criticism of the management for refusing to confine the races at Henley to British entries. It says that American newspaper men invaded the press box, taking the best places, and instead of doing their work, if they had any to do, talked in loud voices to the great detriment of the hard-working Britishers. The writer urges that in future English and American reporters be separated at Henley. The article continues:

"American reporters draw upon their imagination and write anything that comes into their heads, provided that it panders to the anti-British feelings of the men."

The Field reproduces an article from a New York weekly paper of July 11, in which the Henley management was accused of "stacking the cards" against Cornell in the drawing for heats and positions last year.

Copis of this article were distributed by a reporter for the Field, which also reported the races for the United Press, along the Henley towpath before the regatta until the regatta officials interfered.

The Field's article next criticises the behavior of Americans in general, and says: "The English people, unlike Americans, are not everlastingly flag-egging, either ashore or afloat. However, the Yankee flags were not much in evidence after Yale was knocked out."

A painting by Alma Tadema and one by Constable were stolen from a van en route from this city to Paddington on Wednesday. The Scotland Yard authorities believe that they have been taken to New York, which they allege contains a fence for such property. These detectives also assert that they have positive knowledge that Gainsborough's College portrait of the Duchess of Devonshire, which was cut from its frame a few years ago, is now hung in a New York mansion subject to return if sufficient ransom is paid. The wise men of Scotland Yard account for the non-recovery of stolen pictures by the alleged fact that there are so many vastly rich but little cultured people in the United States whose parlors are never invaded by picture experts.

The decision of Lord Chief Justice Russell not to allow ladies on the bench at future sittings of the court for the trial of Dr. Jameson, the South African raider, is well received. There have been many protests about the way in which the recent sittings of the court in this case were turned into society functions.

JUSTICE FIELD'S HEALTH.

He Says There Is No Occasion for Sensational Reports.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—Associate Justice Stephen J. Field of the Supreme Court arrived to-day from Paso Robles in the special train sent for him. In an interview Justice Field said there was no occasion for sensational statements about his failing. He said that he had left Paso Robles because he had completed the course of treatment there, from which he was much benefited, and that he would remain here for a month to escape the heat of the East, going directly to Washington early in September.

INDIANAPOLIS RATIFIES.

Gov. Matthews, Who Presided, Receives a Magnificent Ovation.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., July 18.—An enthusiastic meeting was held in Tomlinson Hall to-night to ratify the nominations of Bryan and Sewall. The attendance surpassed expectations, fully 2,500 people being present. At frequent intervals the speakers were interrupted by enthusiastic cheers. The meeting was significant in that it was the first opportunity the free silver Democrats of Indianapolis had had to express themselves.

The feature of the meeting was the enthusiastic ovation tendered Gov. Matthews when he appeared upon the stage to preside over the meeting. Enthusiasm knew no bounds, and for fully two minutes the tumult kept up. When he could be heard the Governor said:

"I am inclined to believe that one of the motives prompting my call to preside over this meeting to-night is the fact that I was one of those overwhelmed in the resistless mountain torrent of enthusiasm that burst upon Chicago and now sweeps over the land from ocean to ocean."

Senator Turpie followed Gov. Matthews in a twenty minute address. The other speakers were Capt. W. R. Myers, ex-Secretary of State; ex-Congressman Franklin Landers and Editor Jeup of the German Telegraph.

He told the officers that he was getting ready to leave on the first train when he was arrested. Some years ago McGinnis enlisted in the army. He soon got into trouble, was subjected to discipline and was finally dishonorably discharged.

Stole Commissions on Gravestones.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

GALESBURG, Ill., July 18.—Harry Mitchell the traveling man who was arrested at Shawneetown, O., and afterwards escaped, was recaptured, brought here this evening and placed in jail on a charge of forgery. He was employed by S. B. Davis & Co., dealers in tombstones, and is charged with sending in orders for gravestones for people who did not exist and collecting commissions on the orders. One thousand dollars worth of stones have been shipped on these orders.

Healthy, happy children make better men and women of us all. A man is hardly himself until he has the development that responsibility brings. After the child comes, the father and mother both plan and promise what shall be done with it. A little care and a little planning before birth is often more important than anything that can be done after.

On the mother's health and strength depend the life and the future of the children. A weak and sickly woman cannot bear strong and healthy children—as well expect figs from thistles. Most of the weakness of women is utterly inexcusable. Proper care and proper medicine will cure almost any disorder of the feminine organism. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has been tested in thirty years of practice. It is healing, soothing, strengthening. It is perfectly natural in its operation and effect. By its use, thousands of weak women have been made strong and healthy—have been made the mothers of strong and healthy children. Taken during gestation, it makes childbirth easy and almost painless and insures the well being of both mother and child.

The following letter is only one of thousands of similar ones:

Mrs. Florence White, of Victor, W. Va. writes: "I commenced using the 'Favorite Prescription' when half through my period of pregnancy. I used four bottles and felt like another woman. My time of labor was easy and rapid. I have a dear, strong, healthy little boy baby."

HOW BANKERS WILL VOTE.

INTERVIEWING TOUR AMONG THE MONEY CHANGERS.

NEARLY ALL FOR M'KINLEY.

St. Louis Financiers, With Few Exceptions, Take Their Cue From the Wall Street Prophets.

The bankers of St. Louis, like their confreres in other cities west of the Mississippi, are between the devil and the deep sea in the pending political campaign. Whether they declare for or against silver they are likely to offend some of their depositors and hence they prefer to occupy comfortable positions on the fence and watch the contest from a safe distance.

Republican bankers have a shade the best of their financial brethren of the Democratic faith and when pressed for their views upon the political situation take refuge behind the platform of their party and glibly announce themselves for "sound money" and McKinley.

This lets them out easily. If taxed with fighting the interests of the people by their attitude on a question of such vital moment as that now engaging the attention of the American people, they shrug their shoulders and plead party ties and solemn platform pledges.

Bankers of Democratic affiliations, on the other hand, are in an awful plight. They take their cue from the financial magnates of the East, and their newspaper organs and have created a fetich which, for want of a better name, they call "sound money," and worship with blind idolatry.

Nine out of ten of the bankers of the United States would be forced to admit if the question were driven home to them that they know nothing about the theory of finance, and have never read a volume on economic science.

The majority of them entered the institutions over which they preside as office boys or clerks and worked their way by steady application to their duties and faithful service to their superiors. They know all about practical banking and upon that subject are experts and so regarded, but upon broad questions of financial policy and the laws governing the distribution of wealth and the causes that lead to commercial paralysis they are as ignorant as the porter who sweeps the office floor.

Hence it is that like a lot of sheep following a bell wether they rush in where Wall street leads, and with parrot-like fidelity repeat phrases about "sound money" that are coined for universal use in Eastern sound money circles.

The head of one of the strongest financial institutions in St. Louis admitted to a Post-Dispatch reporter that he was a mere practical banker and had never studied finance in its larger sense, and he is a fair sample.

Democratic bankers are wavering in their allegiance to their party in this campaign for fear of being dubbed financial heretics, and when pressed to put themselves on record either flatly decline to talk or talk about a third ticket.

A Post-Dispatch reporter called on the leading bankers yesterday and asked how they intended voting at the next Presidential election. The replies follow:

President Nichols of the Commercial Bank: I shall vote a straight Republican ticket, and they won't have to put it in a capsule for me to take, either.

President Biebinger of the Fourth National Bank declined to be interviewed.

President Lee of the Merchants'-Laclede National Bank: I do not wish to be discourteous to you personally, but I have nothing to say to the Post-Dispatch.

President Baker of the Continental National Bank: I wouldn't give you a word for the Post-Dispatch. I say that emphatically.

President Walsh of the Mississippi Valley Trust Co.: I am going to vote for McKinley.

Cashier McClure of the State Bank: I shall vote for McKinley. Mr. Parsons, President of this bank, who is not in, will vote the same way.

Cashier Farr of the Citizens' Bank: I have not decided. I cannot support Mr. Bryan on his platform.

Secretary Filley of the St. Louis Trust Co.: I am going to support the McKinley ticket.

Cashier H. V. P. Cooke of the St. Louis Safe Deposit and Savings Bank: I am an old line Democrat and will support the Democratic ticket.

Cashier True of the Chemical National Bank: I shall vote for McKinley. I am for sound money.

Cashier Thomson of the Boatmen's Bank: With the lights before me now, I shall vote for McKinley. I consider the sentiments of Mr. Bryan's speech revolutionary. I think the Democrats should put another candidate into the field to demonstrate that Bryan's followers are not Democrats, but Populists. I don't think we could elect a Democrat this year, but I think we ought to put another ticket in the field to preserve the integrity of the party and show we are not Bryanites. I never voted a Republican ticket in my life and am opposed to McKinley's tariff views.

President Bullen of the National Bank of the Republic: I am in the banking business and not in politics.

Cashier Van Blarcom of the Bank of Commerce: I intend to vote for McKinley and Hobart. If I had twenty votes I would cast them the same way.

President Cram of the Third National: I never vote but one way. I'm for McKinley.

Cashier Hospes of the German Savings Institution: I am a sound money man and a Republican.

Cashier Garrels of the Franklin bank: I certainly shall not vote for Mr. Bryan. I consider the action of the Democratic convention a surrender to the Populists and anarchists.

Vice-President Hutchinson of the Mechanics' Bank: I don't know yet. I will wait till the sound money Democrats act; then I'll know what to do.

Cashier Herthel of the International Bank has made a diligent study of financial questions and has formulated a currency plan of his own which was set forth in a letter to Congressman Barthold last February. To the Post-Dispatch reporter he said:

"According to my opinion the financial issue is no longer a party question. The issue is gold or silver, and I shall support the gold platform, although I am convinced that the tendency of the times is towards a disuse of all metallic currencies, and that the day will come when all financial transactions will be on a credit basis. I am one of those who believe that silver has seen its best day as money, and that we are on the eve of a universal currency, and when that day comes we will possibly have found ourselves to have outgrown even the use of gold, a metal like silver, and subject like silver to the laws of supply and demand, and useful only as a less bulky reserve, until in the future we have proven to the world that our notes are as good as our national honor. Make it certain that notes are good and will remain so, and metal money will become obsolete."

President Nelson of the St. Louis National: "I am going to vote the Democratic ticket."

RUNAWAY BOY'S MISHAP.

Richard Harris Lost a Foot Before Getting Out of Town.

Richard Harris, 13 years old, decided to run away from his home at 1713 South Broadway yesterday morning in company with several other boys, and in attempting to board a moving Iron Mountain freight train he slipped under the wheels and his left foot was crushed.

With the mangled member dangling from his leg the boy loafed about the freight yards all day until last night, when he was found by a night watchman who forwarded him to the City Hospital, where the foot was amputated.

LOST HIS PRISONER.

Deputy Sheriff Adolph Troll's Bad Luck With a Pickpocket.

While Deputy Sheriff Adolph Troll was leading a pickpocket to a patrol box in the French Market at 10 o'clock last night, two of the thug's companions attacked the officer and secured the prisoner's liberty, but not until Troll had wrested the purse from the man's hand.

While Mrs. Traumueller was marketing a man grabbed her pocketbook, containing $7.35, from her hand and ran. Troll saw him and caught him. Then it was that the man's two pals attacked the deputy sheriff. One pulled him backwards while the other jerked the prisoner out of his hands. All of them escaped.

CHICAGO CAR BARNS BURN.

Over 500 Cars Destroyed Entailing a Loss of Half a Million.

CHICAGO, Ill., July 18.—The car barns of the Chicago City Railway Co. on Cottage Grove avenue, near Thirty-ninth street were destroyed by fire to-night. The barns were 150 feet long, 400 feet deep and occupied three-fourths of a square. They were filled with cars, being the stables for the entire system. The company lost 554 cars, 160 of them being grip cars. Not a thing in the building was saved. The loss is estimated at fully $500,000, the building and contents being insured for $311,000.

The fire once started burned with great rapidity, and the firemen experienced much difficulty in saving any of the adjoining buildings. They managed, however, to confine the fire to the car barns.

UNCLE FILLEY RIDING EASY.

WEBSTER DAVIS SHELVED AND WALBRIDGE DOOMED.

MAJ. WARNER TO BE PLACATED.

"De Ole Man" Has a Stuffed Club Ready to Ue on Col. Dick Kerens.

The Republican State convention at Springfield next Wednesday promises to be the most interesting and exciting that has been held by the Republicans of Missouri in many years.

The confident and Calliopean claims of the leaders of a sweeping Republican victory in Missouri this year have whetted the appetites of the place hunters to a razor edge, and the candidates at Springfield will be almost as numerous as the delegates.

There are a half dozen or more candidates for the gubernatorial nomination alone, each of whom lays claim to a heavy and promising vote on the first ballot. These are Mayor Cyrus P. Walbridge of St. Louis, ex-Mayor Webster Davis of Kansas City, J. B. Upton of Polk County, B. B. Cahoon of Madison, R. E. Lewis of Henry, Dr. Pettijohn of Linn and John Homer Bothwell of Pettis, with Maj. William Warner of Kansas City standing as a menace to the hopes of them all as long as there is a prospect of a deadlock.

The Major swept the St. Joseph convention off of its feet with a speech that so jarred the Filley machine that its manipulators were unable to work it until it was too late to save the day, and there is no telling what he can do in the same line at Springfield if similar circumstances present themselves.

This is the chief danger that Boss Filley will have to fear at Springfield. If he were certain of what course Warner is going to pursue there he would know exactly what to depend on. For it is evident that all of the elements of avowed opposition are now so weak even in combination that they can do him no harm.

But Maj. Warner is such a cyclone in debate and so masterful in a crisis that Uncle Filley is bound to more or less take the Kansas Cityan's wishes into account when making an inventory of his assets.

One thing is certain about Maj. Warner, and that is that his hatred of young Mr. Webster Davis is implacable.

Knowledge of this is an additional inducement to Filley to drop Davis and take up some man for Governor whose name when placed on the slate will not be a guarantee that Warner will fly at and smash it.

It is well known that the Major's chief interest in the convention is to see that Davis, the bumptious young man who has thumped him hard in so many contests at Kansas City during the past four years is defeated.

The Filleyites, having found an excuse to turn from Davis without acknowledging the fear of arousing Warner's opposition to their slate, have already dumped the young man and are now bestowing upon R. E. Lewis of Henry County all of the favors which they formerly showered so profusely upon Davis.

As soon as they succeed in running Walbridge off the track, which will probably occur before balloting begins, they will deliver to him in a lump the 108 votes of St. Louis.

With the votes that will naturally be Lewis' property this addition will give him a strength that will act like a magnet, and all of the weak and hesitating delegations will come tumbling into line for him.

Upton, who despises Cahoon about as cordially as Warner does Davis, will be glad enough to swing his following to Lewis with the understanding that he is to be cared for either with Federal or State patronage in the improbable event that his party has any State patronage to dispense.

Upton has a double cause from a strictly factional standpoint in desiring to serve Uncle Filley in this way. In the first place, Cahoon tried to sneak through various Grand Army posts in Southern Missouri at the opening of the canvass, nearly a year ago, resolutions of indorsement of himself. This was taking an underhand advantage of Upton in his own territory, and when he found it out he put a stop to it, but in doing it he aroused the bitter personal animosity of Cahoon, which has resulted in an irreconcilable estrangement between the two.

In the second place, Cahoon has succeeded through Col. Dick Kerens in arraying all the influences of the Frisco Railroad in Southwest Missouri against Upton and this has cost Upton several counties in that section which by all the geographical rules that are patent in such contests should be for him. But for these two powerful secret agencies which Cahoon has utilized to more or less advantage Upton has good reason to believe that he would have been the strong man in this race whom Filley in his eagerness to defeat Walbridge would have to turn to, and the pleasure that he will experience when he sees Cahoon's banner go down in defeat can be easily understood.

Cahoon made strong bids for Filley's support up to the time of the St. Joseph Convention in May, and when it became certain that they were going to avail him naught, he went scurrying over to the Kerens side of the fence, and has been there ever since.

So defiant is he at present of "De Ole Man" that he is actually going to ride down to Springfield from this city in Col. Kerens' private car, and be the Colonel's guest. The Kerens party will, by the way, leave St. Louis to-night for Springfield.

So will Uncle Filley.

They will be aboard the same train, but, of course, will occupy different coaches, and the Weary Willie who should chance to ride on the trucks between the two coaches occupied by them will be assured of a frigid atmosphere in these hot dog days of July.

That Mayor Walbridge's goose has been cooked a deep brown nobody with the truth in him or good eyes in his head longer attempts to gainsay.

If one is looking for convincing proof of this he need go no further than the Merchants' League Club, which at a meeting Friday night discovered a rule declaring that its marching corps, which will attend the Springfield Convention in a body, must not "root" for anybody until he has been nominated.

This means that the marching corps will go to Springfield as a distinct anti-Walbridge organization, and the noise it is expected to make against him will cause him to wish he had not passed so many sleepless nights during the past six months while listening to Flewellyn Saunders tell him how it was impossible for him to be beaten for the gubernatorial nomination of his party. A poll of the delegation shows that sixty of its members are dead set against the Mayor, and of the other forty-eight, not more than twenty are enthusiastic for him.

Another potent influence at work against Mayor Walbridge is that concealed in the candidacy of Judge Rudolph Hirzel for Supreme Court Judge. Judge Hirzel lives at Clayton and to all practical purposes is a St. Louis man.

At any rate his affiliations are such in the city that every Teuton on the St. Louis delegation can excuse himself with great good grace to his constituents for having voted against Walbridge because of the harm the Mayor's nomination would inflict upon the candidacy of Judge Hirzel.

With all of these influences against him it seems highly probable that Mayor Walbridge will get a lighter vote on the first ballot than any of the candidates for Governor, and that the Mayor's name will be dropped from the roll after this ballot. Then with the defeat of Cahoon and the nomination of Lewis, Uncle Filley's 'steenth victory over Col. Kerens will be complete, and will partially compensate "De Ole Man" for having been knocked out for National Committeeman.

Col. Kerens returned from New York yesterday, and when seen by a Post-Dispatch reporter declined to talk about the situation because, he said, he had been away from the State so long that he had lost track of nearly everything.

Uncle Filley wouldn't talk, either.

He has received from Fire Alarm Flanigan the following letter:

CARTHAGE, Mo., July 16, 1896.—Hon. Chauncey I. Filley, St. Louis, Mo: Dear Sir—If you care to notice the ravings of Morse (of Excelsior Springs) in Post-Dispatch, you are at liberty to say for me, first, he is a liar in toto. Neither yourself, any friend of yours, nor any other person ever mentioned money to me in that contest. I saw Mr. Davis, but no money was exhibited by me to him, or even spoken of. At the time I saw him he was for you. What changed his mind I do not know. Yours truly, JOHN H. FLANIGAN.

AMUSEMENTS.

"The Princess of Trebizonde," opera bouffe, opera, farce comedy, vaudeville and circus all in one, will be produced for the last time at Uhrig's Cave to-night.

Manager McNeary has chosen a double bill with an abundance of charming music and original comedy for presentation Monday night. Alfred Cellier's "Charity Begins at Home" will be the curtain raiser and will be followed by "Billee Taylor," written and composed by Stephens and Solomon. The last named opera will be of especial interest to many St. Lousians as it will introduce Alex Joel, the favorite basso, in the part of Sir Mincing Lane. Below are the casts:

Among the singers attracting attention this summer in St. Louis is Jack Shields, who carried the role of Ralph Rackstraw in "Pinafore" at Koerner's Garden. Mr. Shields is well known in amateur circles, but this was his first attempt in professional company. He acquitted himself admirably. He has a voice of marked sweetness and power, and acts well. He is handsome and in love with his art, and it will be surprising if he does not win fame in the operatic world. After finishing his engagement here he will go to New York and join a regular company.

A letter from W. G. Smyth to his father, I. S. Smyth, says the New York theatrical firm of Smyth & Rice will put on the boards a new comedy, entitled "My Friend From India," opening in Philadelphia on September 7.

The concerts given at the Union Trust Roof Garden are proving very popular and the attendance is very satisfactory. The class of music rendered is of a kind adapted to this kind of weather. The Garden is the coolest place in the city to spend a hot evening, and the low price of admission is an additional recommendation.

KILLED BY A HORSE.

Teamster Frank Macousgk Dies From a Kick in the Stomach Received While Unhitching.

Frank Macousgk, a teamster in the employ of Fred Heims, at 1328 Russell avenue, met with a frightful death yesterday afternoon.

At 5:45 Macousgk was engaged in unharnessing his team. Suddenly one of the horses gave a violent kick, the hoof striking the unfortunate teamster with great force on the right side above the abdomen and felling him to the ground, where he lay in a paroxysm of pain.

Dr. Hogan of 1637 South Broadway was called and did everything in his power to alleviate the stricken man's suffering, but he was beyond the reach of human aid and expired in great agony while under the doctor's care.

Kind friends conveyed the body to the dead man's home at 4215 South Tenth street.

Macousgk was 51 years old and of Bohemian nationality. He leaves a widow and five children.

WEDDED AT ALTON.

Mysterious Nuptials of Herman C. Francke and Carrie L. Schmiermund, Who Can't Be Found.

A man giving the name of Herman C. Francke and a girl who said she was Carrie L. Schmiermund, both of St. Louis, were married yesterday afternoon at Alton, Ill.

The only Herman C. Francke mentioned in the St. Louis Directory is a traveling salesman for the St. Louis Stamping Company, whose residence is given as 3141 Chestnut street.

A Post-Dispatch reporter who called at that number last night learned that Francke had been married for some time, and on July 4 left St. Louis for New York, whither his wife had preceded him two weeks. They rented the house, furnished, to a Mrs. Day.

Mr. Fred Niedringhaus, Superintendent of the St. Louis Stamping Works, told the reporter that Mr. Francke married several years ago in the East. He had been employed by the company about ten years. Mr. Niedringhaus knew nothing of Mr. Francke's supposed trip to New York.

There is but one family of the name of Schmiermund mentioned in the directory. Their address is given as 2007 Market street. At that number it was learned last night that the Schmiermunds had removed to the West End several months ago. Their exact location could not be ascertained.

DRAGGED BY A ROLLER.

Thomas Bright Badly Hurt While Driving a Rock Crusher.

Thomas Bright, employed by the Street Department, fell from a four-horse steel roller which he was driving over some macadam that had been spread at Nineteenth street and Sullivan avenue yesterday afternoon.

He was caught in the running gear and was dragged over the rough street for several yards before the horses could be stopped. His right side was badly lacerated. At the North Side Dispensary Dr. Reber dressed his wounds and found it necessary to take thirty stitches.

Bright is 50 years old and lives at 1433 Farragut avenue.

WESTERN ASSOCIATION.

St. Joe Dropped on Account of Location.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., July 18.—The Western Base Ball Association had a special meeting here to-day with a full representation in attendance. St. Joseph was dropped on account of its geographical location and the season will be continued with six cities, St. Joseph retaining its franchise. The Des Moines club was awarded the Pennant for the first half of the season. A new schedule is being arranged and the second half will be finished on Tuesday.

EAST ST. LOUIS NEWS.

The Oberts Base Ball Club will leave for Centralia this morning to play the club of that city.

E. C. Lane, who on July 6 left the office of the Police Gazette, New York, on a wager that he would reach San Francisco in thirty days, traveling as a "hobo," passed through East St. Louis on Saturday. Lane said that he would easily reach California in the allotted time. He visited the various newspapers and will resume his journey this morning.

Christian Zittel of Toledo, O., is the guest of his brother, Charles Zittel, of 330 Broadway.

The County Board of Supervisors will meet at Belleville to-morrow to hear objections to the assessments as made by the Township Assessor.

Henry Sopp, a well-known farmer of East Carondelet, while plowing in his field yesterday afternoon was horrified to unearth a human skull. When he recovered from his fright he began to search for further evidences of what he considered a terrible crime, but was unsuccessful. He called in Dr. McCracken to examine his find, and that gentleman expressed the belief that the skull had been recently buried. Coroner Campbell, when notified, instructed Justice Louis Castor of East Carondelet to investigate. Sopp says that he plowed the identical spot last year and found no skulls, and is firmly convinced that a murder has been done.

SULLIVAN DISGRUNTLED.

Said He Was Sick and Refused to Play—Had Words With Dowd.

Joe Sullivan, the star player of the Browns, had trouble with Capt. Dowd yesterday.

Before the game, Sullivan told Dowd that he did not want to play. He said that he was sick and indisposed. Dowd was skeptical and insisted that Sullivan play, and play he did. A better game was never put up by any player.

After the game Sullivan and Dowd again had words and it is said that Sullivan threatened to jump the team. Dowd retaliated with a threat of suitable punishment.

Sullivan has always been known as a hard man to control when he wants to go ahead and do anything, but it is to be hoped that the trouble between him and his captain is only temporary.

GREEK LAD WITH QUEER DOLLARS.

FEDERAL AUTHORITIES PUZZLED BY A YOUNGSTER.

THOUGHT THEY HAD THE MINT.

Candy-Makers Suspected of Giving Anton Pasas Counterfeit to Pass Set at Liberty.

Secret Service Operative Callan and Deputy United States Marshal Brennan, armed with a search warrant, made a thorough examination of the candy store at 519 Poplar street yesterday afternon in the hope of finding there the counterfeiting plant from which were turned out the spurious coins found on the young Greek, Anton Papas.

The search was fruitless, for the officers found nothing but furnaces and material for making candy. When they gave up the hope of uncovering an outfit for making spurious silver dollars they notified the police to release the three Greeks, Joe and Michael Kerchooiei and John Peitoa.

Papas, who is known to have passed three spurious dollars in Carondelet Friday afternoon, was put in jail, as United States Commissioner Gray held him in $1,000 bail and ordered him committed in default.

The United State officers have a clear case against Papas, but they are far from satisfied, for they do not know where he got the counterfeit money, and he will not answer questions as to where the plant is.

After the search of the Poplar street house yesterday Operative Callan gave it as his opinion that the money had been expressed here from Chicago.

The testimony adduced at the examination of Papas before Commissioner Gray was to the effect that the young Greek went to William Metzler's saloon at 6831 South Broadway Friday afternoon, bought a drink and offered a spurious dollar in payment. Metzler handed him the change, and Papas went his way.

Next he entered George Elsner's cigar store at 7207 South Broadway, bought a cheap cigar, and tendered a dollar of the same make as the one passed on Metzler. Elsner took the coin and returned the change.

Papas chose as a third victim Edward Heinzmann, who has a saloon at 7301 South Broadway. He took a drink and presented a deceptive looking, but very light weight, dollar. As soon as Heinzmann took the coin in hand he became suspicious and drew out his pocket knife to test the metal. He scratched the dollar and found that it was of soft, base metal.

Instead of returning the coin Heinzmann appropriated it and laid hands on Papas, while a messenger hastened off in search of policemen. He returned with Sergt. Mullican and Patrolman Hanifan and they took Papas to the First District Police Station.

Papas was seached before he was locked up and four spurious silver dollars of the same pattern as the one presented to Heinzmann were found in his pocket.

The boy's first story as to how he came by the spurious coin was that three Greek candy makers at 519 Poplar street had given it to him to pass and return the three quarters of the change. In contradiction of this statement he said at the Four Courts, where he was subsequently taken, that he changed a $5 bill on a car coming in from Forest Park and that among the change were the four bad dollars.

The officers from the First District and Detective Kelly and Patrolman Dundon of the Central went to the candy store at 519 Poplar street and placed under arrest Joe and Michael Kerchooiei and John Peitca, all partners in the candy business.

The prisoners were taken to the Four Courts, where they were locked in separate cells in the Central Police Station.

The Federal authorities were notified and a warrant was issued by United States Commissioner Gray for Papas.

At the same time the search warrant was issued so that the officers might search the Poplar street house.

As the police had taken the precaution to lock up the place when they arrested the Greek candy-makers the Federal authorities were confident of unearthing whatever might be there, as it could not have been removed.

The supposition of the police and the Federal officers was that the proceeds from the small candy store were not sufficient to support all of the partners in the business, and that it was merely a cover under which they could operate a mint.

A candy store would make an excellent "blind" as a hot furnace for melting the spurious metal could be kept going all the time, and strangers and visitors would presume that the fire was for making candy. Candy-makers use a large fire-base with a grate, which could not be improved upon by counterfeiters.

The Government authorities acted on the presumption that if counterfeit money had been made in the place Papas had not been the only person employed in passing the coin, and that possibly the gang might number twenty or thirty and extend to other cities.

Nothing contraband was found to support the theories of the officers and the Greeks were permitted to return to their candy-making.

The coins found on Papas are of exceptionally good make. The execution of the mold is excellent, the letters and figures, disc and rim are almost perfect. The metals have been harmonized, so that there is a clear ring, but the sound differs considerably from the genuine. Then there is a peculiar soapy feeling to the counterfeit coin which is not noticeable in the dollars made at the Government mints. The lightness of the spurious money found on Papas is its principal defect.

During their imprisonment the three candy-makers professed absolute ignorance and innocence of counterfeiting.

MRS. ADAIR WILL HAVE TO FIGHT.

MAYOR NEELY OF LEAVENWORTH CONTESTS HER CLAIM.

PAYNE'S ANTE-NUPTIAL DEED.

His Stepdaughter's Attack on It to Get Valuable City Property Strongly Resisted.

The interesting story of Mrs. Elizabeth A. Adair's big land claim, which was told in the Post-Dispatch July 1, was given a new turn yesterday, when Shaw F. Neely, ex-Mayor of Leavenworth, Kan., against whom Mrs. Adair filed an ejectment suit in the State Circuit Court, July 1, brought an action in equity against Mrs. Adair in the United States Circuit Court.

Mrs. Adair has sued a number of persons, in order to get what she claims is her due, and she obtained a verdict in one case, which was looked on as a test of her rights.

The litigation which she has set on foot clouds the title to all the property lying along the northern side of Geyer avenue, from Seventh street to Jefferson avenue, and also to forty acres around King's highway and Magnolia avenue, and large tracts in the northern part of the city now used by railroads for terminal purposes.

Shortly before July 1 Neely advertised for sale a large tract on the south side of Magnolia avenue at King's highway. As that was some of the land to which Mrs. Adair laid claim, she brought an ejectment suit against Neely in the State Circuit Court, relying on her victory against a Mr. Mette, whose property at Seventh and Rutger streets she claimed in part.

Mrs. Adair claimed a one-third interest in Neely's land, which has a frontage of 1,790 feet on the south side of Magnolia avenue.

Neely had the case removed to the United States Circuit Court, as he is a resident of another State, and it is now pending there.

To hasten matters and to put Mrs. Adair on the defensive Neely filed an equity suit against her in the United States Circuit Court yesterday to quiet his title to the property and to restrain her from asserting her claim.

Mrs. Adair's story takes one back into the early days of St. Louis.

In 1839 Mrs. Mary Jones came to St. Louis from Memphis, Tenn., just after the death of her husband, a Mississippi River pilot. She had two little children, George and Elizabeth, now Mrs. Adair. She made her home in a cabin in the woods near what is now Park and Grand avenues. With money which her husband left her she bought the Geyer avenue property, the forty-acre tract and North End land already mentioned.

Soon after she came to St. Louis Mrs. Jones, tiring of being a lone, forlorn widow, took up with Thomas Payne, a famous horse trader of that day, who built near Tower Grove Park the first race track that this city ever had.

The marriage ceremony was dispensed with, but by 1846 Tom Payne and Mary Jones had two children of their own, who were named Bryan Mullanphy Payne and Howard Payne.

These later arrivals, their parents, the mother's two Tennessee children and the father's son from his first marriage made up the family that lived in the cabin in the woods.

In 1846 Tom Payne took umbrage at Elizabeth Jones, the daughter of Mrs. Jones, because she married a man named Mattox. She was only 13 years old, and she survived Mattox and also Adair, her second husband.

To cut Elizabeth off from her mother's property, Payne induced Mrs. Jones to sign a so-called ante-nuptial contract, in 1846. By this instrument Mrs. Jones made Tom Payne trustee of her property for the benefit of her son and of their two sons, who were born between 1840 and 1846. The day after the contract was signed Tom Payne and Mrs. Jones had a religious marriage ceremony performed.

Mrs. Payne, formerly Mrs. Jones, died in 1853, and Tom Payne handled her large real estate holdings as he saw fit until his death in 1867. Many leaseholds were carved out of the estate, but from the death of Tom Payne until 1889 his son from a former marriage and the sons Bryan Mullanphy Payne and Howard Payne, held the fee simple to the property in common. In 1889 there was a partition sale, and in 1892 Mrs. Adair brought her first suit to recover one-third interest in all the property of which, she held, she was robbed by her mother's ante-nuptial contract.

Her attorney sucessfully contended in Judge Withrow's court in the suit against Mette, that as Mary Jones and Tom Payne lived together for six years and had two children, they had contracted a common law marriage and could not make an ante-nuptial contract.

The fact that much of the land was held in common until 1889 was held to prevent the statute of limitations from being pleaded against Mrs. Adair.

Neely in his bill in equity filed in the Federal Court yesterday contended that he has been in open and notorious possession of the property for years, and that his chain of title from Thomas J. Payne was perfect. He denied the fact of the common law marriage, and alleged that if it had taken place the defendant was estopped from asserting the claim because the parties themselves, namely her mother and Thomas J. Payne made the ante-nuptial contract as they averred in the instrument, in contemplation of marriage.

GRATIOT CABANNE MARRIED.

Young St. Louisan Elopes With Miss Martin of Bardstown, Ky.

Gratiot Cabanne of this city and Miss Mae Martin of Bardstown, Ky., formerly a resident of St. Louis, were married yesterday in Louisville, Ky. The affair was an elopement.

Young Cabanne met Miss Martin while she was living in St. Louis. She is a niece of Edward Martin, a director of the Fair Grounds Association. Her father moved to Bardstown some time ago.

Recently Miss Martin returned to this city to visit friends. Cabanne renewed his attentions to her with the result that they determined to get married. Her parents were opposed to the match, but this made no difference to the lovers.

The girl returned quietly to her home about six weeks ago. Cabanne remained here until all suspicion was allayed. Friday night he left for Louisville. His bride met him there and they were married without her parents' consent.

When young Cabanne departed he told his father not to be surprised if he returned with a wife. Nevertheless the old gentleman will be.

Gratiot is a brother to Dute Cabanne, the famous cyclist. He is a good wheelman himself and one of the best all-round athletes in the city. He is an especially clever boxer.

He is employed by the Davidson & Sons Cycle Company on Olive street.

A DARING DIVE.

Youthful Lee Schuyler Hurls Himself Into the Raging Mississippi From the Eads Bridge.

Lee Schuyler, aged 21, made a successful leap from the Eads' bridge at 9 o'clock Saturday morning. He made his plunge head first and never turned a hair until he struck the yellow water, his hands straight over his head like a wedge.

The affair was very quietly managed, but about 1,000 persons witnessed the daring plunge. Just a few minutes before the hour named he showed up on the bridge accompanied by Eugene Musler, his side partner.

An innocent looking wagon was driving along just ahead of them. It contained the board which was to be put through the railing, and from which Schuyler was to leap.

The two boys strolled out carelessly to the center of the bridge. The driveway and walks on either side were crowded. No one paid any attention to them.

Having reached the center of the big span, they stopped, a little rattled. Two policemen were very close to them. They hardly knew what to do. It was impossible to use the board. The leap must be made from the top of the railing.

It was a desperate thing to do, for wires ran along the outer edge of it, stretching two or three feet beyond it. To catch the feet in them might mean death, but Schuyler decided to risk it.

A few quick twists and his clothes fell off. He stood clad in a fancy swimming suit. Then he sprang upon the railing with Musler holding him to steady his poise.

He clicked his heels together and gave one swift look to the water below.

A tug was there in waiting. On its deck stood a fat man with closely cropped white chin whiskers. It was Bill Clark, the Belfast Chicken.

He waved his hand at the boy standing at the perilous height. Schuyler threw back his arms, leaned forward slightly and leaped, curving far out over the wires.

Down, down he went, with his arms outspread like the wings of a bird. His legs were slightly drawn. Occasionally he moved one of his arms, like a hawk in the heavens, to steady himself.

As he neared the water his hands moved over his head. His legs straightened out behind him. He cut into the river like a knife and disappeared.

A thousand people saw the boy make his plunge. The excursion boats were just about to leave, and the Levee was crowded.

As he hung over the stretch of space that to them seemed certain death, they held their breaths. He leaped out and a startled cry went up. Every whistle on the river front screeched out a cyclone of discordant shrieks. The crowd tumbled down to the levee's edge.

They saw the diver's head bob up. He shook the water from his eyes like a dog, and raised one arm triumphantly as the hovering tug came closer and the fat arms of his patron flung him a rope. In a second the boy had grasped it and was aboard the boat.

The tug steamed over toward the foot of Washington avenue. Two policemen stood in the crowd awaiting its landing. Prof. Clark grew suspicious. He thought they might want him and his bridge-jumper, so he had the tug turn around and run down the river.

At Pine street the coast was clear, but Schuyler would not even take chances here. Clark sprang ashore and the tug steamed back up the river beyond the bridge. Clark jumped into his buggy and drove north to pick up his youngster.

Schuyler was not hurt in the least. As soon as he was hauled aboard the tug, he changed his clothing and looked as chipper as though he had done nothing unusual.

He expects to go on a tour of the country, diving from bridges until he breaks his neck or achieves the reputation of being the highest diver on earth.

The dive is calculated to be 125 feet. It beat's Baker's record by a few feet, as the water is now lower, and is said to be a world's record. Schuyler challenges any man in the world to a high diving contest.

RAZOR'S BLOODY WORK

Joseph Warreck, in a Drunken Frenzy, Attacks His Wife and Stepdaughter With Fearful Results.

Joseph Warreck was arrested at 4:30 o'clock yesterday morning for a murderous assault upon his wife and her 15-year-old daughter, Eva O'Donnell.

The couple were married last January, Mrs. Warreck being then the Widow O'Donnell. She is 31 years old and her husband 25.

A Post-Dispatch reporter saw Mrs. Warreck in the hospital yesterday morning. She has a great gash on the side of her head, penetrating to the skull and encircles the ear, which member was almost severed from her head. On her left arm, between the wrist and the shoulder are a dozen ugly wounds. The wounds were inflicted with a razor.

The daughter is in a worse plight. Warreck made a slash at her with the razor and struck her forehead, cutting clear to the bone and gouging the right eye from its socket. The blade almost severed the nose and laid the cheek wide open.

The following account of the occurrence and the events leading up to it was given to the Post-Dispatch reporter by Mrs. Warreck: "We were married in January of this year. For a few weeks all went well, but he soon began to drink and treated me and my children so cruelly that I could not stand it. Just before the tornado I took my children and went to live by myself at 2110 South Ninth street. I did sewing and was getting along nicely. My husband kept bothering me, but he never threatened me with violence till a week ago.

"That night he was drinking more than usual. He met me on the street as I was returning from a friend's house. He drew a razor from his pocket and said he would kill me with it some time. I hardly thought he meant what he said.

"Last night about 10 o'clock I was returning from a visit to Mrs. King's at 1006 Walnut street, when Warreck again met me. He insisted on going home with me, but he was drinking and I tried to dissuade him. He went any way, and we had no more than entered when he began his abuse. I ordered him to leave the house. This seemed to anger him and he drew his razor and began slashing at me. He struck me repeatedly and I ran out of doors screaming.

"Warreck then turned on my daughter Eva. I started back into the house calling for help. We heard people running, and my husband ran out of the back door.

"The doctor says Eva is dangerously wounded. I am sorry he did not wreak his vengeance on me alone, and not butcher my girl. Her face is frightfully cut, and she has lost one eye."

COL. ABE SLUPSKY COMES TO GRIEF.

CHARLEY M'CORMICK PUT HIM ON HIS BACK.

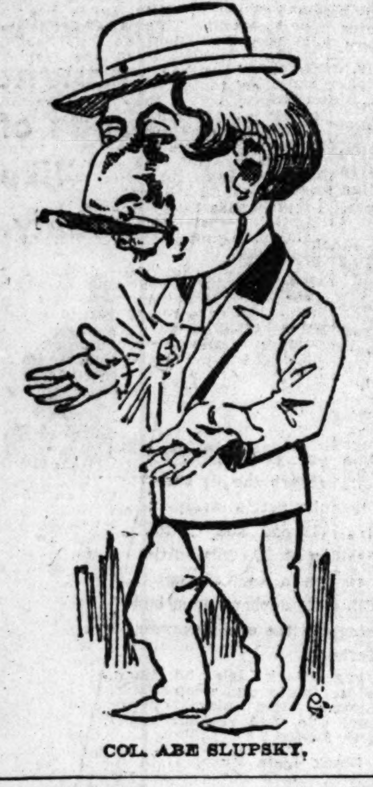
THEY FOUGHT TWO ROUNDS.

The Best the Colonel Could Do Was to Chew His Doughty Opponent's Finger.

Col. Abe Slupsky, the puissant warrior, has been humbled to the dust.

His plume is trailing in the mire and his pride is crushed, even as an eggshell over which a freight train has just passed.

He fought two rounds with Charlie McCormick, proprietor of the Standard Theater saloon at 1 o'clock yesterday morning, and was knocked out twice in quick succession.



COL. ABE SLUPSKY.

McCormick, or "Shorty," as he is familiarly known, was dragged away by his friends and sent home to keep him from eating Slupsky up entirely, but Col. Abe, with the claret streaming down his shirt front, remained on the scene of his defeat an hour and a half telling what he would have done had conditions been different.

Col. Slupsky was out Friday night with a party of friends, celebrating nothing particular, and during the course of the evening fell in with "Kid" Sheridan.

About midnight they landed at Delegate Jim Cronin's saloon, at Twenty-first and Market streets.

The Colonel was in an amiable mood, and had not even suggested the desirability of a scrap during the whole evening.

In the meantime Charlie McCormick, whose place is closed during the summer, was cavorting around a little on his own hook, and he had a "roll" as big around as a boa constrictor.

He wandered into Cronin's place at Twelfth and Walnut streets about the time that Col. Slupsky put in an appearance at the other place.

Had it not been for this fact this tale of blood might never have been written.

After awhile McCormick became tired of the festivities, for quite a soiree was in progress, and Delegate Cronin took him in his surrey and drove him to his home on Twenty-third street.

Cronin then dropped into his place on Twenty-first street and met Col. Slupsky, Sheridan and other friends and hung over the bar with them for a while, discussing politics and keeping tab on the cash register.

Imagine his surprise on seeing McCormick walk in.

McCormick had taken off his vest and put on a different coat and was looking more airy than he did an hour before.

Sheridan and Cronin were standing near the door. Col. Slupsky was at the other end of the bar.

As McCormick entered Sheridan nudged Cronin and exclaimed:

"Now, watch them come together!"

Almost before Cronin had time to look around McCormick advanced on Col. Slupsky and let him have a good one with his right.

Before one could have made even a casual reference to Jack Robinson the Colonel fell sprawling on the floor.

As he attempted to regain his feet the look of surprise that decorated his countenance was pitiful.

He didn't know whether it was a battering ram or a cyclone, and terrible visions of Seventh and Rutger streets flitted through his cerebrator.

Finally he discerned the outlines of his antagonist through the dust of the battle and sprang to his feet and made for him with a rush.

It was a battle between giants—little giants—and both right up to date.

The men clinched and went to pounding each other at close range, while the claret from Slupsky's bugle ran down in a stream on "Shorty's" collar button.

Cronin, Sheridan and others ran to rescue each man from the other's clutches, but they refused to be rescued until they had taken a few parting punches at each other.

They were separated for the time being, but while Cronin was trying to find out what it was all about McCormick broke loose and they went at it again.

Once more the plume of Col. Slupsky went down in the fray. Things were getting desperate. Something had to be done.

By a mighty effort the Colonel managed to secure a good hold on the middle finger of "Shorty's" right hand with his teeth, and everybody thought that, like a terrapin, he would never let go until it thundered.

Finally they were again separated, and again McCormick was taken home in Cronin's surrey.

But Col. Slupsky refused to leave. He was heart-broken over his first defeat and lingered mournfully to view the scene and tell his troubles.

When the smoke of the engagement had cleared away the spectators endeavored to get at the casus belli.

From all accounts the attack by McCormick was the outgrowth of the series of fistic entertainments arranged by Col. Slupsky for the edification of visitors to the Republican National Convention.

On the morning of June 10, when the National Committee met at the Southern Hotel Col. Slupsky was on hand and entertained a party of delegates by knocking out Julius Wurzburger, first deputy under Collector Ziegenhein.

The next night, at Tony Faust's, while boasting of his victory over Wurzburger, the Colonel called him an A. P. A., and announced his ability and readiness to "lick" any other person of doubtful birth and A. P. A. tendencies.

Tom Walsh, the bookmaker, who was standing near by, took exceptions to this remark, and Col. Slupsky immediately put him to sleep.

McCormick is a friend of Walsh, and took up his cause. He met Slupsky for the first time yesterday morning since the affair at Faust's, and the bloody fight and the Colonel's discomfiture followed.

Bethesda Home Benefit.

The proceeds from the operetta of "Golden Hair," given by children of the West End at the Pickwick Theater a short time ago for the benefit of the cyclone sufferers, was turned over to Dr. Saunders for the Bethesda Foundling Home. The building in which the Home was located was destroyed by the storm, and the children since then have been taken care of by different families in that district. A fund is being raised to put the building in good shape, and the $32 realized from the performance will be given to that fund. The operetta was under the management of the Misses Jessie and Maud Kelley and Addie Ellwanger.

CONSUMPTION IN OUR MILCH COWS.

ONE "VET" SAYS TUBERCULINE ISN'T A FAIR TEST.

ANOTHER CLAIMS THAT IT IS.

Interesting and Learned Discussion of Questions Involved in the Crusade for Pure Milk.

The subject of tuberculine and its merits as an accurate diagnostic agent for the discovery of tuberculosis in cows is creating a great deal of interest and discussion among the scientists on the one hand and the dairymen on the other.

By an application of the generally accepted tuberculine test it has been decided that the entire herd of cows at the Poor-house is affected with tuberculosis to a greater or less degree in various individuals. Some of them which showed the disease without the aid of the test have been killed and disposed of. The rest are still furnishing the milk for the institution.

The two questions which seem to be the most prominent are whether the test is sure or not and whether cows affected with tuberculosis, which can only be found by the test, necessarily give milk containing tubercular bacilli.

J. S. Sutcliffe, a veterinarian, in a communication to the Post-Dispatch on the subject, says:

"Allow me to reply to an editorial in the Post-Dispatch under the heading of 'Go Slow With the Cows.'

"Much has recently been published in our city papers regarding tuberculosis in our dairy cows, and some very extravagant assertions have been made regarding the danger of communicating the disease through the milk to the human race. A number of these articles have had their origin in the Health Department, a source that we should expect to be authority upon the subject. Consequently I believe a very wise step was taken when Dr. Ravold was sent to Europe to learn something about tuberculosis and tuberculine.

"As it appears to me that the Health Department cannot have been in possession of the recent publications regarding the investigations that have been made by our most eminent authorities upon the subject, such as Dr. Koch of Berlin, the United States Department of Agriculture and the report of the New York State Tuberculosis Commission, permit me to copy some extracts from them.

Dr. Koch, the discoverer of the tuberculous bacillus, says: "Before all things, if infection is to take place through the milk, it is necessary that the milk contain tuberculous bacilli. But this appears to be the case only when the milk glands themselves are tuberculously diseased; but since tubercles do not often occur in the udder (milk glands), the milk of tuberculous cows will often possess no infectious properties."

The special report of the United States Department of Agriculture shows that about 1 or 2 per cent of tuberculous animals have tuberculous udders. The special report of the United States Department of Agriculture has the following: "The milk of tuberculous animals is not so frequently infected as has been supposed. It may be laid down as a general rule that the milk of animals in the early stages of tuberculosis, and with perfect udders, does not contain tubercle bacilli. The removal of advanced cases and those with tuberculous udders would probably exclude the sale of most infected milk."

Animals in the early stage should be fattened and sold to the butchers. Their instructions to meat inspectors is to condemn only advanced cases as unfit for food.

"Now is the Board of Health going to kill ninety-nine cows that are practically healthy in order to find one by which there is a possible chance to transmit the disease through the milk? I say possible chance because in the report of the New York State Tuberculous Commission they say a small animal may consume four or five quarts of milk from a tuberculous udder with impunity, which, if continued daily, would certainly infect it. The experiment of Bollinger & Gebhart, referred to in their report, showed that the dilution of such dangerous milk with fifty or one hundred times its volume of sound milk will almost remove the element of danger. They further state there is still another source of protection in the acids of the stomach, as acids either kill the bacili or render them inactive.

"As to the number of cattle affected in the St. Louis dairies, I believe the reports to be very much exaggerated. During my appointment as United States Meat Inspector at one of the large abattors in East St. Louis, where from 500 to 1,200 cattle were killed daily, I did not find on an average one tuberculous animal per month. I believe that the city meat inspectors will bear me out in saying that but a very small per cent of cattle are found affected.

"As to the herd at the City Poor House, I am only surprised that every animal is not affected, as those cows have nearly all been raised upon their farm from diseased parents, and have been kept in constant contact with each other, in a stable which Dr. Carter, the City Milk Inspector, condemned as one of the most unsanitary in the city.

"Why have these 22 cows that were condemned on the 17th of June at the Poorhouse, been allowed to remain with the healthy ones, and their milk fed to the inmates?

"And last, but of far greater importance, upon three different occasions when I visited that place since the cattle were condemned, I saw several horses confined in the same yard as these cows. I was informed that these horses were used to produce the anti-toxin serum. If this is a fact, I say by all means condemn these animals as unfit for the production of serum, as it is almost impossible to tell if they have tuberculosis in their system, and it is a well-known fact that the bacilli grows very rapidly in the serum.

"If our health authorities would weed out all animals with tuberculous udders, then the danger from tuberculous animals would be reduced to a minimum without the reckless destruction of a large number of practically healthy cows."

Dr. Howard Carter, the City Milk Inspector, has made a very careful and exhaustive study of the tubercle question, and is constantly hunting up all the information he can get on the subject.

He said to a Post-Dispatch reporter:

"Much diversity of opinion exists among pathologists regarding the infectiveness of milk of cows in whose udders careful examination has failed to find tubercular lesions. The results of inoculation experiments with such milk have been both positive and negative. Prof. Bang of Copenhagen experimented with the milk of sixty-nine cows, with apparently healthy udders. In nine cases the milk proved to be infective; careful microscopic examination of the udders detected tubercle in only three, leaving six wherein the milk was infective without discoverable lesion of the udder. Herschberger inoculated rabbits with the milk from thirty-nine tubercular cows, in which the udders were to all appearances sound, fourteen of the inoculations were infective.

"Ernst reported ten cows out of thirty-five whose milk proved to be infective, although the udders were apparently sound. Inoculation reduced the disease in seventeen out of 103 animals and of twelve calves sucking these cows five became tuberculous.

"Drs. Smith and Kilbourne of the United States Department of Agriculture found the milk infected in three out of six cows with apparently sound udders.

"In six successul inoculations made by Prof. Adolph Gehrmann of Chicago, the udders of five were pronounced to be sound.

"Bollinger, Nocard and McFadyeon were not successful in their inoculation experiments where the udders were free from the disease.

"After a careful study of available reports upon the subject, I incline to the opinion that tubercular lesion of the udder must be present if the milk is infective, at the same time tubercular lesions may unquestionably exist which are altogther undiscoverable during life and only by exhaustive microscopical examination after death.

"Whenever the smallest tubercular erosion of a milk sinus or dust is present it can readily be seen how the bacilli are swept into the stream in the act of milking.

"I emphatically deny that any person can by physical examination alone pronounce with certainty upon the infectiveness of milk in any given case of this kind. Inoculation experiments upon the lower animals with milk of tuberculous cows are not invariabyll succeful showing that the bacilli are not at all times present in the milk of cows so affected.

"I further consider that milk of cows, no matter how slightly affected with tuberculosis, is not without danger to those using it."

In his annual report just submitted to the Mayor Dr. Carter gives a brief and comprehensive statement regarding the nature of tuberculine and how it is prepared and applied. He says:

"The difficulty of an early and infallible diagnosis which formerly baffled the skill of the most experienced veterinarians has been overcome by the discovery of the Koch's lymph or tuberculine. This is a substance resulting from the products of the tubercule bacilli upon the culture media, in which they are artificially grown and subsequently deprived of all organism and their spores by filtration through porcelain, after which it is thoroughly sterilized by heat and carbolic acid is added as a preservative.

"When first discovered by Dr. Koch it was claimed that its injection into the circulation of human beings would arrest the progress of established cases and cure the disease. These hopes have not been realized."

Tuberculine has, however, been used extensively by veterinarians, in whose hands it has proved to be an almost infallible diagnostic agent for the discovery of tuberculosis in any stage among domestic animals. It was found that the subcutaneous injection of small doses invariably resulted in an elevation of temperature of 2 or more degrees Fahrenheit in afflicted animals. Those free from the disease suffered either a slight elevation in temperature or none at all. Its use has not in any recorded cases resulted in any injury beyond a slight temporary disturbance.

Regarding the cows at the Poor House, Dr. Carter has warned the Superintendent to boil all the milk thoroughly if he is compelled to use it, but he is of the opinion that the best thing to do is to destroy the whole herd, as it is a constant source of danger, especially if the milk is given to sick or feeble patients.

"As to the effectiveness of the test," said Dr. Carter, "there are many authorities on the subject, among them, Dr. Armsby. He has studied the matter very carefully and in a paper of his he gives the following translation from an authoritative German journal which keeps track of all of the Koch and other experiments:

"The Berliner Thierarztliche Wochenschrift says: 'We shall now stop publishing reports on tuberculine in the Berlin Veterinary Weekly unless they contain some new facts or views. Since the publication of the reports of the extensive experiments of the Royal Health Office, we may regard the question of the value of tuberculine in the diagnosis of tuberculosis of cattle as settled.'

"In the State of Massachusetts," continued Dr. Carter, "they think the matter of sufficient importance to declare every cow in the State in quarantine until it has passed the tuberculine test satisfactorily. If the cow fails to come up to the required standard it is killed and removed. The State has been divided into districts, and is being gone over in a most thorough and complete manner."

The local authorities in St. Louis have no laws under which tests can be made, but the State Board of Agriculture has, and has been doing some work in that line, although legal questions have arisen, which are not yet settled.

IS A CANDIDATE.

Col. Kern Wants to Go to Congress and Says He's for Free Silver.

Col. Robert H. Kern is a candidate for the Democratic nomination in the Twelfth District.

In an interview with a Post-Dispatch reporter yesterday Col. Kern said:

"I have never attended a meeting of either the friends or enemies of silver. I was in Europe last summer pending the discussion of the subject in Missouri.

"On my return in the fall, as my friends know, I commenced negotiations for a settlement of litigation I had in charge for the Freedmen of the Cherokee Nation, involving millions of dollars. This was important enough to warrant me in closing up my practice here (I have been in court here but once since October) and spending practically all my time in the Cherokee Nation and at Washington, D. C.

"I will conclude by July 29 my work in the Indian Territory, when I shall return to St. Louis, where I hope, with the assistance of my friends, to secure the nomination and election as Congressman from this district.

"My position can best be stated in language I used in a speech at the Jefferson Club in April. I there said I had taken no part in political discussion for two years; that I had never for thirty years faltered in my Democracy; that I was anchored and would take a lodging in no other household; that I would abide its action at Chicago, whatever it might be; that I had fought its battles on the stump twenty years, and that my services would be at its command now as then, going wherever and whenever it wanted me to go.

"I have no different announcement to make now.

"I notice with regret the sharp differences of opinion in my own household. I can but believe on second sober thought, they will disappear, and as election day approaches the party will become a unit.

"If my friends feel that my record as a citizen—my work for my party for twenty years, without asking one favor at its hands, entitles me to the great honor I seek—they will nominate and elect me. Whether nominated or not, my services are at my party's command.

"If nominated and elected I will vote for restoring silver to free coinage in equal terms with gold at the ratio as provided in the platform."

GONE TO JAIL.

The Belleville Salvation Army Captain Could Not Pay His Fine.

Capt. Fred Anderson of the Salvation Army, better known as "Happy Fred," was locked up in the County Jail at Belleville yesterday.

A week ago the army held an all-night meeting of fasting and prayer at their barracks on First and High streets. Several of the neighbors complained of being disturbed, and at their solicitation Chief of Police Obst swore out a warrant against Anderson, charging him with making loud and unusual noises.

He was tried before Justice Guentz Tuesday and fined $3 and costs, aggregating $27.50. He then declared that he had no money with which to pay it, and announced his readiness to go to jail, but in accordance with his usual practice the Chief gave him time in hope that some one would pay the fine for him.

It was the day before that the Chief, yielding to pressure from his superiors, and to the clamor of the rabble, demanded a mittimus for the incarceration of Miss Clara Meyer, the young lady who had been fined some days before for beating her drum in the street parade.

The article in the Post-Distpatch calling attention to the unfair discrimination against the young lady, and citing instances of real culprits who had been fined months before still being at large, and notably those of disturbers of the Salvation Army, against whom it was never intended to proceed, caused the Chief to reef his sails.

He kept his hands off the young lady, but gave it out that all delinquents would have to pay up or go to jail. He accordingly had a number of mittimuses issued, and they were served yesterday. All managed to get the money together and stay out of jail except Capt. Anderson. When the paper was served on him he said he had no money, and locking up the quarters, was taken to the jail and placed in the custody of Turnkey Burke.

Unless friends come to his rescue he will have to remain there 55 days, and he will be required to earn his keep by breaking macadam at the Work House in hickory shirt and overalls.

This leaves the local corps temporarily without officers, as the Lieutenant, who has been assisting Capt. Anderson, was ordered away day before yesterday, but the meetings will be carried on by the local soldiers.

The present intention of Chief Obst is to clear his delinquent docket and then swoop down on Miss Meyer in order that he cannot be criticised for discrimination.

Newspaper criticism and the pulling and hauling to which he has been subjected by people on both sides of the Salvation Army warfare has made him nearly frantic, and he is determined that no delinquent shall escape his drag net.

The Captain is as cheerful as could be expected under the circumstances, and intends to improve his time while breaking rock in trying to convert the hardened sinners with whom he will be thrown in contact.

While on the way to the jail, the Captain requested Chief Obst to accompany him back to the barracks in order that he might get his Bible. The Chief refused, but afterward sent Constable Wm. Davis back after the book.

HARMONY IN SILVER'S VOICE.

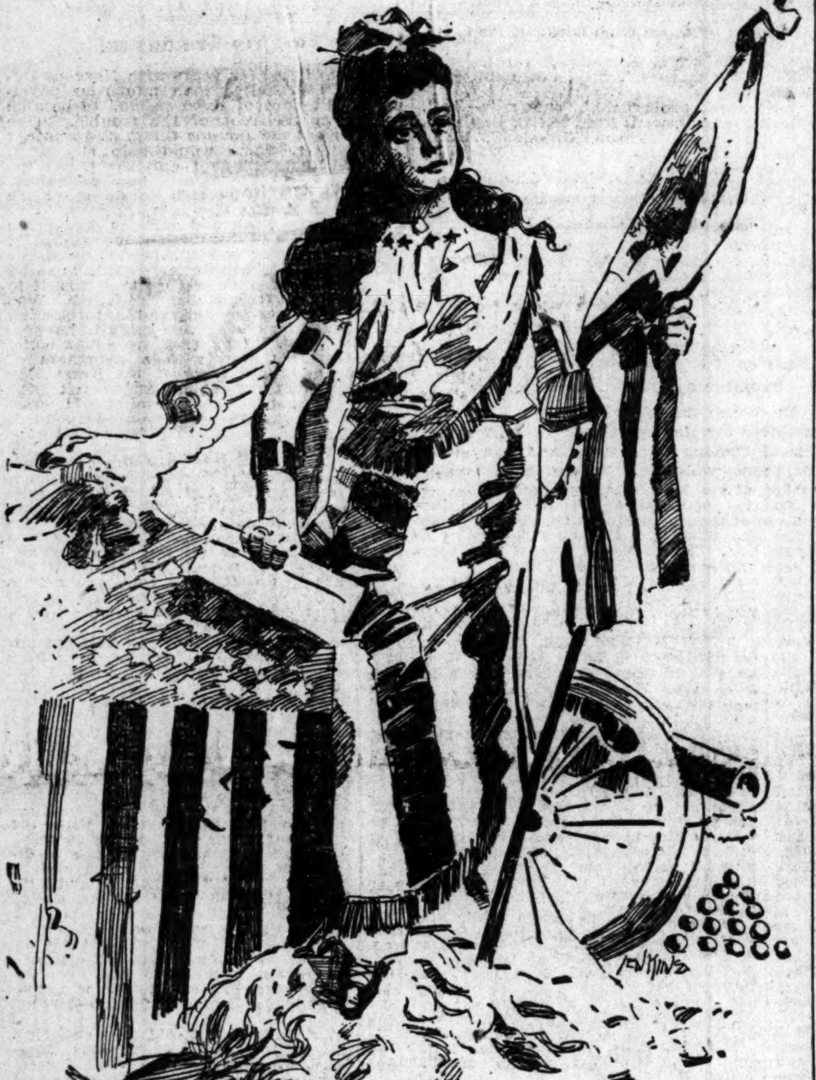
NON-PARTISAN BIMETALLISTS ARE A UNIT FOR BRYAN.

WEDNESDAY'S CONVENTION.

Some of the Men Who Will Lay Aside the Politics of Years and Attend the Counsels of the New Party.

When the National Silver Convention is called to order in Grand Music Hall next Wednesday it will be the initial gathering of a new political party, but not of new and unknown men, for in it will be a large number of veterans in politics and men of national reputations.

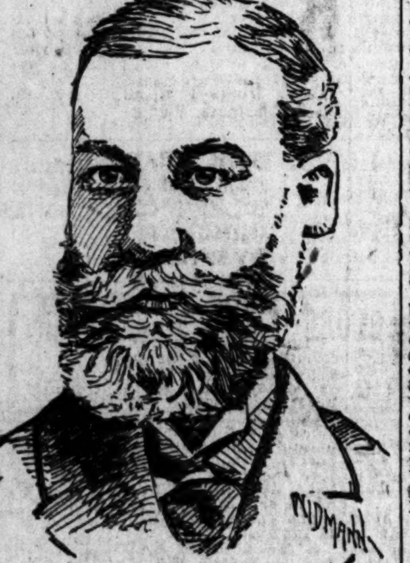
Though the party is less than a year old, according to apportionment there are to be 1,200 delegates and as many alternates in the assembly, coming from every State and Territory in the Union. The National Silver party is a non-partisan organization, and the main stone in its foundation is to labor for the restoration of silver as standard money and place it where it stood prior to its demonetization by Congress in 1873.



LILLIE B. PIERCE.

She Will Read the Declaration of Independence at the Silver Convention.

For nearly two decades there have been silver organizations and leagues contending for its rehabilitation. There has been a silver league with headquarters in San Francisco, another with headquarters in Chicago, and still another and very active one with headquarters at Washington, D. C. In their separate ways they have, with heroic pertinacity, braved many defeats, but gone on educating the masses up to the present almost universal demand for the free coinage of the white metal.



WILLIAM P. ST. JOHN.

Last January it was decided to call a general conference not only of members of these several leagues, but of the friends of silver irrespective of party affiliations. The conference met at Washington, D. C., and before it adjourned the National Silver Party was born, and on a basis to be a refuge to men of different party faith, but united for a common cause.

A platform of principles was drawn up and published to the country, in which was enunciated the objects of the new party. It set forth the organization's position as the advocate of genuine and practical bimetallism. It wished to be understood not as the enemy of gold, but as the friend of silver. It merely desired to put it on an equal footing with gold.

Gen. William H. Warner of Ohio was elected President of the Bimetallic Unions, and Dr. J. J. Mott of North Carolina Chairman of the Executive Committee of the new party, with George P. Keeney of California as Secretary.

The directors of the new party at once commenced a vigorous campaign of organization in nearly all of the States. Little or none was needed on the Pacific slope, and its most energetic work was done in the [illegible] goldbugism—the East and Middle [illegible] of the Allegheny Mountains. [illegible]ly that work has been done [illegible]ally put in evidence when [illegible] raises his gavel next Wednesday noon on the stage of Grand Music Hall.

The convention was called to meet in St. Louis July 22, because on that date the Populist party had called its National Convention, and for this reason, as explained by Dr. Mott:

At the time of calling the convention it was thought and appeared to the friends of silver that both the Democratic and Republican parties would be dominated in national convention by the gold standard element. The Populists were committed to the free coinage of silver, and being considered the only national organization friendly to it, it was deemed expedient to have the conventions simultaneous, with a view to having them agree on a common standard bearer to stand on an unequivocal free silver platform.

But, as Dr. Mott continues, a revolution of sentiment took place within the Democratic party, and when the representatives of that party met in convention at Chicago all other national issues paled before the absolute demand of the majority for free silver. It was the propelling force to drive silver to victory if it is ever to land there; a platform and a candidate was the outcome of that convention that took the wind out of the sails of the National Silver party and on the main issue as effectually out of those of the Populist party.

"Now what will we do about it?" is the question that confronts both the Populists and National Silverites.

Expressions from delegates who have arrived in the city for the National Silver Convention point conclusively to an indorsement by that convention of the Chicago nominees.

Chairman Mott, Secretary Keeney and other representatives say that all the intelligence received from members of the Silver party tend in that direction.

This conclusion is spontaneous by reason of the financial plank in the Chicago platform and the nomination of William Jennings Bryan, all in consonance with their views, and paving the way for the triumph of the free coinage of silver.

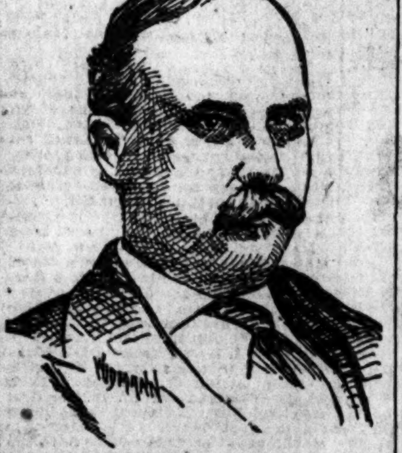
Chairman Mott said yesterday that he expected his convention to be in session until Friday night at the least. It has been settled that Congressman Francis G. Newlands of Nevada will be temporary chairman of the convention. Col. M. F. Doud is already the Sergeant-at-arms, and it is generally conceded that William P. St. John of New York will be permanent chairman and George P. Keeney of California Secretary.

William P. St. John has for years occupied a unique place among the great bankers of New York, and as a financier took front rank among the financial leaders of Wall street. Until recently he was President of the Mercantile National Bank of New York. He has been all these years a consistent and able exponent of bimetallism, contending for the restoration of silver.

Mr. St. John was born in Mobile, Ala., in 1849, being the son of Newton St. John of the banking firm of St. John, Powers & Co., for a quarter of a century agents for Baring Bros. & Co. of London in the South.

His administration of the affairs of the bank has been eminently successful, but the issue between the gold-standard, 200-cent-dollar barons and the friends of free silver became so acute that the directory of the bank gave their ultimatum to Mr. St. John that he must either sacrifice his views as a citizen for free silver or step down and out of the bank presidency. He chose the latter course and left at once for the Chicago Convention, in which he received quite a number of votes for the Vice-Presidency. Mr. St. John will reach here Tuesday and have quarters at the Planters.

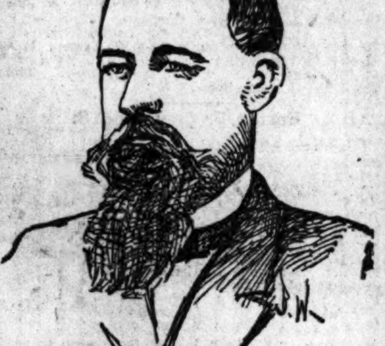
Among other men of national prominence who will be delegates to the convention are: Senators Stewart and Jones of Nevada, Congressman Newland of the same State; Senator Fred T. Dubois of Idaho; Senator Lee Mantle of Montana; Senator Cannon of Utah; Congressman Charles Hartman of Montana; Senator Teller of Colorado; Senator Pettigrew of South Dakota; and Senator Thomas Carter of Montana, late Chairman of the Republican National Committee, if his health will permit him to come; B. O. Flower of Boston, editor of the Arena; Judge Walter Clark of North Carolina; ex-Congressman Wm. H. Warner of Ohio; ex-Congressman Lafe Pence of Colorado, and scores of others, who have in the main been bulwarks of strength in the Republican party.



WALTER CLARK.

One of the opening features of the convention will be the reading of the Declaration of Independence by Miss Lucille B. Pierce of St. Louis, a charming young lady, whose elocutionary powers are widely acknowledged.

The arrangements for the accommodation of visitors, the press and the decorations of the big hall are complete in every detail, and for a new party the silverites will make a most attractive and substantial showing.



M. F. DOUD.
(Sergeant-at-Arms.)

The procedure of the convention is exciting interest, especially as it is given out that it is expected to be in session several days, in the face of the unanimity of opinion that the outcome will the unequivocal indorsement of the Chicago nominees.

Secretary George P. Keeney's plan is that when the two conventions meet there shall be a joint conference committee, charged with the duty of making a report upon the common demands of both conventions.

"If this can be done I believe," said Secretary Keeney, "that within two days an agreement can be reached which will favor the indorsement of Bryan.

"If this is not done, then it may be agreed that the silver men shall go ahead and nominate Bryan as if he had never been mentioned before. It looks from present indications that this will be the action of the silver men, anyhow."

"Do you think the Populists intend nominating a straight ticket?"

"That is not the idea of many of the influential men that I have talked to. But there is a feeling of no surrender, especially with the Southern delegates in States like Georgia, Mississippi, Tennessee and Texas, where war has been bitterly waged between them and the Democrats. It is not so with the Western, Eastern and most of the Northwestern delegates. They favor the indorsement of Bryan and success and have no fears of disbanding or disorganizing their forces in State and county elections.

"They are patriotic enough to subordinate their views on national candidates in order to allow their views on the greatest of all national issues to forge to the front."

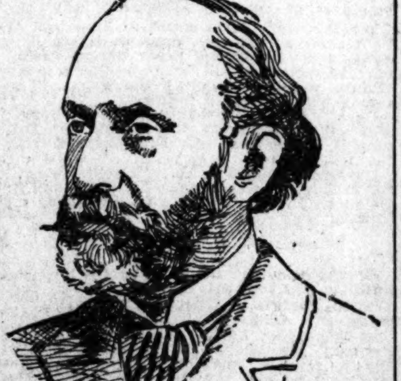
It is a movement of this kind or something similar to it that may prolong the convention.

"My idea and hope," said Dr. Mott, "is to harmonize all the elements of party strength and march them in solid phalanx to the polls in November against the imperial hosts of gold. I believe this is going to be done, and if it is not done the men responsible for the plan work here will hear from their constituents when they go home.

"I know that men who have borne the brunt of battle for years to build up a new party are loath to yield one jot or tittle lest they impair the autonomy of their party. Now there is not the least fear or excuse that should stand in the way, for as I understand it nobody is demanding any submission or subjection from anybody in this campaign.

"It is sought, however, to make it a co-operative fight, every man preserving his party respect, keeping intact his State, county and precinct organizations, but rising to the patriotic plane of accomplishing a great end that is certainly the private desire of all, and which will redound to the common welfare and prosperity of the whole country.

"If this can be done, then success is assured. I am a Republican on principle, who believes that bimetallism is necessary to the commercial growth and stability of this country, and I am willing to subordinate all minor predilections in order to see that cause successful.



GEORGE WILSON.

"Left to itself the National Silver party would perhaps have nominated a far different man from Mr. Bryan, but he has views on the main issue in accord with mine and that of my party, and he is the nominee of a great and successful party. At least it was successful four years ago. There are upwards of 3,000,000 silver men who do not belong to the Democratic organization, but they are not enough to elect a candidate. Combined with the host of Democratic voters also for free silver, they form a coalition that is simply invincible. Separated and fighting each other on issues of minor importance, this vast silver majority comes to naught. The people are willing enough to get together, but they have confidence in their leaders, a majority of them have, and if the leaders advise to the contrary, upon them must rest the responsibility of disaster."

Another influential politician, a strong Populist-Silver man, made this observation in the Lindell Hotel lobby yesterday:

"Do you know why the Populists are not going to put a third ticket in the field?"

That was just what his listeners wanted to find out and insisted that he answer the question himself.

"Well," said he, "it is because they have no one to nominate. Who has heard any mention of presidential candidates in the midst of all this talk about what the Populists will do? Not a candidate has been suggested. Why? Simply because there is no man of presidential size for them to persuade into accepting the nomination. Every man of that caliber, with leanings toward the Populist faith, has made haste to declare himself for Bryan.

"The Populists may nominate a third ticket, but he will be a minority candidate. The majority is going to be true to the people."

A grand benefit entertainment and hop will be given by the Olympic Dramatic Stock company, under the management of N. J. Kisling, at National Hall, Dolman street and Allen avenue, this evening. THE SOLDIERS' SECOND WEEK.

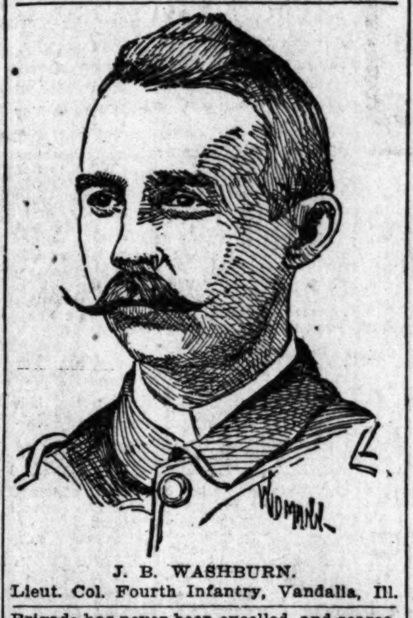
THE ILLINOIS NATIONAL GUARD HAS BEEN SOLDIERING.

BRIGADE DRILLS A SUCCESS.

There Has Been Death and Sickness, but the Soldier Boys Have Been Learning Their Duties Well.

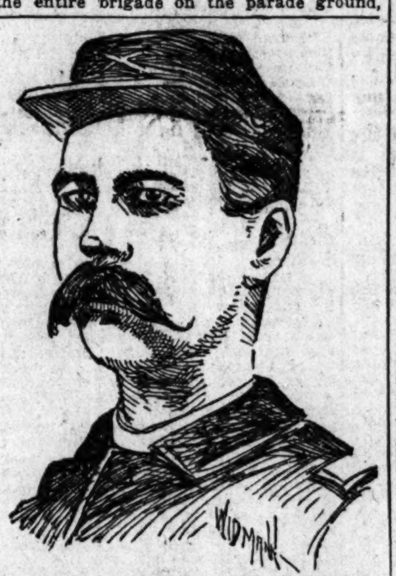
Special to The Post-Dispatch.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., July 18.—The annual encampment and school of instruction of the Illinois National Guard has completed its first week, and to-day entered upon its second. The past week has been one of interest, accidents, sickness, privations, hardships and in fact almost everything excepting actual warfare, that goes toward making up the life of the regular soldier. The week's practice marching, battle exercises and general drills, have been of incalculable benefit to the citizen soldiery of the State Guard. The regular army officers, sent here by the War Department at Washington to inspect the maneuverings of the Guard, state that the work of the First Brigade has never been excelled, and scarcely ever equalled by any national guard in any State of the Union.



J. B. WASHBURN.
Lieut. Col. Fourth Infantry, Vandalia, Ill.

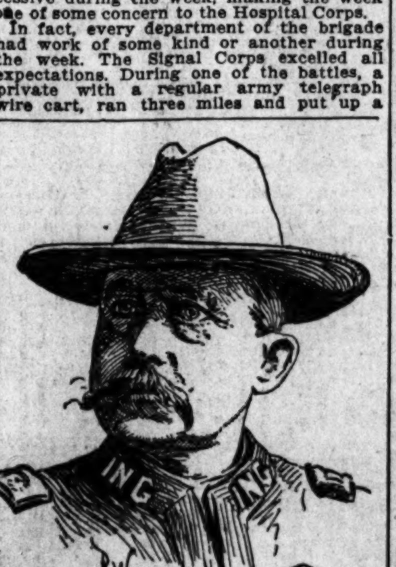
Maj. Gen. Wesley Merritt, commanding the Department of the Missouri, was here the first of the week, and after reviewing the entire brigade on the parade ground, stated that it was as fine an exhibition of soldiery as he had ever witnessed. Other officers of smaller prominence went further and held it could not be beaten. The work of the Ninth Battalion, colored, was nearly perfect. This battalion, which is the only one of the kind in the State, was created by the Thirty-ninth General Assembly upon a bill introduced by John C. Buckner, member from Chicago, and who has been made Major of the battalion. They are perfect in alignment, carriage and drilling. Gov. Altgeld publicly complimented the battalion on the parade ground yesterday.



MAJ. S. A. D. McWILLIAMS, CAIRO, ILL.
Major Fourth Infantry, Second Brigade, Illinois National Guard.

One death occurred, the drowning of a private; one private had his spine broken; three hundred privates were poisoned by ivy vines, twenty-five were seriously ill from eating green apples and seven hundred were overcome by heat, which was excessive during the week, making the week one of some concern to the Hospital Corps.

In fact, every department of the brigade had work of some kind or another during the week. The Signal Corps excelled all expectations. During one of the battles, a private with a regular army telegraph wire cart, ran three miles and put up a telegraph wire ready for service in thirty minutes. Signaling was had from the dome of the State House to Carlinville, forty miles away, and private messages were sent from the same point to Camp Lincoln without a break.



MAJ. J. C. CABANIS.
In charge State Arsenal, Springfield.

The annual encampments of the National Guard have hitherto been held by regiments, but the present brigade encampments with more extended drills and practices establishes the fact that the men are given better practice as a whole and brigade tours will likely be the rule from now on.

DESPERATE YOUNGSTER.

Stabbed a Playmate in a Fit of Sudden Anger.

Herman Otto, a 16-year-old boy who lives with his parents at 1417 Carroll street, was taken to the City Hospital last night with an ugly stab wound in his left side.

Young Otto and a half dozen of his friends were playing in the street near Thirteenth and Rutger streets at 8 o'clock last night. The boys were scuffling good-naturedly, when Otto suddenly reached out and delivered a blow that he said was unintended and knocked Chester Izarts down.

Izarts resented the assault, and quickly arising reached for his pocket knife. He opened it and made a lunge at Otto, striking him in the left side. Izarts ran away and was not arrested.

At the Hospital Dr. Sutter said the wound was not serious. The blade struck a rib and prevented what might easily have proven a fatal stab.

Izarts is a lad about 13 years old and lives with his parents at Thirteenth and Rutger streets.

Shelton's Jury Could Not Agree.

The jury that tried Lee Shelton, alias Stack Lee, colored, after remaining out twenty-two hours, reported yesterday that it was unable to reach an agreement and was discharged. The last ballot stood seven for conviction of murder in the second degree, two for manslaughter and three for acquittal. He was indicted for murder in the first degree.

Last Christmas night Shelton shot and killed William Lyons, colored, in Curtis' Saloon, at Eleventh and Morgan streets, over a game of craps.

'ROUND ABOUT IN GOTHAM.

THINGS OF INTEREST NOTED IN THE METROPOLIS.

GEO. GOULD ON HIS YACHT.

Structure on Park Row Which May Be the Tallest Building in the World.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Down in the Lower Bay these summer mornings it is a sight to note the fleet and the number of men who come to town daily in their own boats. Commodore George J. Gould is one of these. His Atalanta is in commission with its full complement of crew. Every morning Mr. Gould descends from the rear end of the train, and, crossing the track, goes to the wharf edge, where the crew, with the steam launch seventy-five feet long meets him, and, with a regular naval salute, receives him and starts at once for the yacht which he boards without any fuss or sounding of cannon.

All on board is perfect neatness from stem to stern. Everything is polished, and throughout the entire yacht, which is 250 feet long, everything is kept in the same shape.

A glance at her beautiful saloon, with its solid silver service and china closets, and its beautiful boudoir for Mrs. Gould, the guests' chamber and those of the Commodore on the upper deck, shows marvels of beauty and no stinting outlay of wealth. His Royal Highness, the Prince of Wales' photograph, personally presented, hangs looking down on the diners, and while Commodore Gould could entertain fifty guests from the well-stocked larders of the yacht, during his business trips to the city, he usually is alone.

Up near the pilot's bridge he sits in the cool of the morning, fanned by the ocean breezes, and attends to his most important private business matters, not caring to be on the deck as master of his ship or in any way interested or giving commands.

Everything about the yacht is done with the characteristic plainness of the Gould family. He hardly addresses a dozen words to the Captain during the entire trip, but everything works with precision and in strict accordance with the work governing a man-of-war. In addition to all the luxury provided on the yacht, a regular armory and magazine is provided, with which equipment an enemy could be well fought and kept at a distance by the aid of the two cannons and 100 stacks of arms, with as many pistols and sabres. This is necessary on board of a yacht whose owner is one of America's most prominent money kings and railway magnates, and whose death would upset the stock market of the country.

A quaintly dressed old gentleman entered an uptown hotel the other day and walked up to the desk. In a tone that was musical, he said to the clerk: "May I have a room here?"

The clerk assigned him a room and was impressed by his manner. The old man came downstairs afterwards and engaged the clerk in conversation.

"I have come all the way from Alabama," he said, "and I was told your hotel was on Broadway. I walked from the downtown ferry until I found it. I was afraid to take those funny cars without horses. In my town we have mules to drag the cars. When I go to bed I want you to send one of those niggers upstairs with me to turn off the gas, as I am used to lamps only, and am afraid to put out the gas. I might forget to turn it off and instead blow it out."

The old gentleman was well cared for at this hotel for two days. He was seen by the clerks to talk to a well-known detective. The clerk asked the detective who he was, and was told that he was none other than one of the brightest detectives from New Orleans. He had disguised himself in order to trap a young woman he was shadowing, and followed her for weeks, assuming different disguises in each town that she stopped at.

Within five years the city of New York has added to the number of vehicles that use the streets at least 200,000 bicycles. Had 200,000 additional carriages and wagons suddenly been placed on the streets the city would have noted the difference much more quickly. The increase in bicycles has caused commotion only by the surprise expressed at seeing so many of them, for the bicycle is a compact machine and takes little room.

In the course of two years more it is believed the number of bicyclists will be doubled. It is going to be a problem to take care of them when that happens. Not that they cannot be accommodated on one street. So long as there are only two or three streets that are particularly adapted to the bicycle by reason of the nature of their pavement, the riders will flock to them. When it comes to providing for the possible half million riders on these few streets, it is apparent they will be safe neither for cyclists nor pedestrians. In projecting street improvements for the future it would be wise for city officials to place a great deal of importance on the factor of the bicycle, not forgetting that the number will grow larger, in all probability, from year to year, and that as they increase in number, the needs of streets suitable for their use will become greater.

It is not a special privilege to improve streets for the use of a half million of the population. It has been deemed wise to build roads for horseback riding, when that pleasure, in its best days, has never been the pleasure of one-tenth the number who ride the bicycle. As streets are improved and roads grow better the bicycle will become more the vehicle of convenience and necessity, and less that of pleasure alone. There are a half million people in this city to-day who would ride the bicycle to and from work were the streets in condition to permit them to do so.

Abbey's Theatre, the lease of which was recently secured by Al. Hayman, is to be rechristened the Knickerbocker. Mr. Hayman had a consultation yesterday with Mr. Robert Goelet, owner of the building, and the name suggested was singularly the same that Mr. Goelet selected from the number submitted to him. For a time the choice was between Amsterdam and Knickerbocker.

The season will begin Sept. 14 with Francis Wilson and his company in a new opera entitled "Half a King." At the end of that engagement Charles Frohman and Frank Sanger will produce their new London purchase, "The Sign of the Cross." Following will be Beerbohm Tree and his company from Her Majesty's Theatre, in "The Seats of the Mighty," from Gilbert Parker's book.

Mr. Tree has elected to produce that play first in this country. At the close of his engagement here he will return to London and open his new theater there with it. When he leaves he will be followed by Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's new play, "A Lady of Quality," which she is now dramatizing. If arrangements can be made, Sir Henry Irving's son and Dorothy Baird will be in the new play. The Bostonians will fill out the rest of the season with a new opera. The theater will be overhauled and improved in many respects.

A unique combination of houseboat and twin screw yacht was launched a few days ago at South Brooklyn. She is a freak that will attract attention anywhere. She was designed by C. W. Butler of this city for Wm. Gillette, the well known playwright. The principal dimensions are: Length over all, 62 feet; water line, 56 feet; beam, 16 feet. She will draw about two feet of water when loaded. She is fitted with twin propellors and her speed is estimated at nine knots an hour, but a peculiarity of her construction is that she has no smokestack or any escape of smoke or valve that would indicate her motive power. The engines, which take up [illegible] are placed aft and a gasoline tank is built forward, where an ice chest and water tank capable of holding 200 gallons is also located. The engines by giving the flywheel a turn mix the gasoline with air, and it is injected into the cylinders, where a wire from a storage battery produces a spark which causes an explosion and starts the engine.

The hull is flat bottomed, with sides that flare a trifle forward. Her frames are of white oak and the planking of yellow pine. The main cabin is separated from the engine by a bulkhead, and occupies the greater portion of the boat. It is trimmed tastefully with hardwood, and the flooring is polished and strewn with rugs. A stairway on the starboard side leads to the pilot house. A bulkhead divides the main cabin into two parts, and the owner's stateroom is on the starboard side, while the kitchen is on the port side. In the cabin proper on the port side will be a handsome open fireplace and an excellent upright piano, while forward of the fireplace is a roomy divan which can be converted into a double bed.

When the steamer St. Louis sailed Wednesday morning she carried as a second cabin passenger for Southampton Miss Alice Diehl, a pretty brunette, 2 years old. She paid $75 for her passage, and is being chaperoned by Miss Agnes Brown, one of the stewards. This passenger is the daughter of Arthur Diehl, an artist, and since her mother's death, when she was 6 months old, the baby has lived with first one aunt and then another, but now an aunt in Liverpool wants to take sole charge of her, and it is to her the little one is bound. Mr. Diehl had some difficulty in persuading the steamship people to accept so young a passenger; in fact, the company at first refused to take the little one, so Mr. Diehl advertised as follows:

"Will passenger, steamer St. Louis, sailing 15th, register girl 3 years, Southampton? Address Agnes Brown, stewardess, steamer St. Louis."

At first no one had signified a desire to undertake the charge, but baby's big dark eyes, and the evident need of a permanent home and care for so dainty a bit of feminine humanity were too much for even the rules of a steamship company. The child, no doubt, will receive plenty of attention, however, and not require much of the stewardess' time, for she is a bright, pretty little creature.

There is now being erected on Park Row a structure which, when completed, will be, perhaps, the tallest building in existence. Rising above the new St. Paul building, also in process of construction near-by, the building is to be 386 feet high, twenty-six stories main and three stories in the towers. The weight of the structure will be 52,000 tons. The facade in Park Row will be in what is roughly classed as renaissance architecture. It would be somewhat difficult, however, to say what particular feature of renaissance, as all office buildings of the "sky scraper" form must conform to a multiplicity of practical conditions which narrows their sphere in art. The front of the building will be divided into four equal parts laterally, the two extreme divisions forming towers, terminating above the flat line of the roof with octagonal corner turrets at the angles.

The front will be peculiar by reason of the complete omission of an important cornice. A regulation Doric cornice will cap the base at the second floor line and again a string course at what might be called the termination of the stylobate. The central bay, composed of two of the four lateral divisions, will be divided into five spaces by means of four pilasters, three or four stories in height. At the top will be Doric columns three stories high, and at the street level heavy piers and Doric columns to mark the entrance. Above the third story surbase will be figures in sculpture supporting lamps. The building will be furnished with fifteen elevators, nine from the first floor to the twenty-first, four express elevators to the twenty-sixth and two from the twenty-sixth to the twenty-ninth. A striking point in the whole design is the disposition of the problem of lighting the interior. The windows will be of generous width and all square-headed to admit a maximum amount of light.

She wore a mannish costume and carried a small skye terrier under her arm. She was pretty, though undeniably a new woman. She planted herself in Tony's bootblack chair in front of Jefferson Market yesterday morning and pulled her skirts up over the tops of her lace shoes. She wore a sensible thick-soled shoe, laced up high, and Tony's professional instincts overcame his surprise. He proceeded to "shine."

Then the crowd gathered. First they were small boys, who made remarks and laughed and gave advice to Tony. Soon came men, who stopped to smile and remained to see the outcome of the adventure, for blushes were chasing one another across the new woman's face, and she was evidently nervous. Tony finished one shoe and started on the other when the young woman's eyes began to show water. Fifty men and boys crowded around the stand.

"How am I going to get away from here?" she asked, imploringly.

Tony didn't know; he was sticking to his work. Just then two policemen came along and scattered the crowd, and Tony finished his job. The new woman gave them a graceful smile through her tears and said "Thank you" as she jumped from the stand and rushed for a passing car.

But Tony had the last say, and he said it with sadness: "The newa lady, she runna away and don't pay me my nickel for the shine."

A LISTLESS MARKET.

The Fierce Raid of the Week Came to a Close Friday Night.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—The Post says: The fierce attack on Stock Exchange values which a combination of discouraging circumstances has made possible this week, had spent its force before the opening of to-day's business, but the market was left in a condition of lassitude which precluded any immediate return of strength. The reason for this is obvious.

The events of the week, aside from such accidents as the illness of Mr. Vanderbilt, had been such as by a continuance of existing conditions may readily recur.

Uneasiness over the political situation is being bred among foreign investors by the attitude of the leading financial journals abroad; and the apparent lack of strength in this market serves to confirm their fears.

The results of this have been seen during the week in the gold withdrawals, which even the very fair London buying of stocks has not availed to check. For this reason there was no force following the upward turn on Thursday afternoon, and yesterday's irregular fluctuations merely represented the winding up of a bear movement which has been the main feature of the week.

The moderate shipments of gold—especially after the exaggerated statements concerning probable shipments by to-day's steamers—were, of course, a favorable influence; but there was doubt as to the real significance of this moderation, and the market failed to respond, for it had become almost wholly professiona

The Owner of Aquinas Explained the Case—Honig Again Called Him Down—Racing News.

There was a race at the Fair Grounds yesterday afternoon between Dan Honig and Barney Schrieber. Honig was entered under the name of Zamar II. and Barney Schreiber under the name of Aquinas.

There was much feeling aroused between the two owners and after the race for nearly an hour Barney was explaining to President Maffitt, Judge Burke and Secretary Aull how it all happened.

The fifth event on the card was a 2-year-old race of six furlongs. Zamar II. was the favorite, Agent the second choice and Aquinas up among the 6 to 1 shots in a five-horse race. On his last out Aquinas ran tenth to an inferior field to the one he ran in, but despite this fact Schreiber thought he could win and backed his opinion by betting $600 or $700 on his entry at 6 to 1.

Honig was equally certain that Zamar II. would win, and bet his money on him accordingly. When the race was over Aquinas had won comfortably by a length and a half from Zamar II. Then Honig made his kick, and made it hard. He and Schreiber met at the Judge's stand and spoke to each other most unkindly. Honig reminded Schreiber that he was the first to make a row when a horse running last in a poor field came out and won in a good one. It was also suggested during the debate that several owners had been ruled off for lesser offenses than this.

What Schrieber said to the judges and officials, and what they said to him, has not transpired, but things looked very murky for a little while.

The day's racing was generally satisfactory, and was a day of second choices and favorites. In the first race First Chance was made an odds-on favorite for some reason or other, but never got better than fourth place after the start. The distance was a mile and the going pretty good. Eau Claire, a 6 to 1 shot, won by a head from Charlie McDonald, with Mountain Quail in third place, then came First Chance fully six lengths behind the winner. The second race was a gift to Schiller, although unfortunately he had to go lame to win it. When pulled up the plucky little horse was found to be in bad shape. He won, however, by a length and a half from Pelleas, after getting off last. Mrs. Bradshaw came in third.

The third race was one calculated to make the form players very uneasy. It was for four and a half furlongs for 2-year-old fillies. They kicked and bucked at the post and charged through the gate and acted in a most unladylike manner for forty-five minutes before a start was had. Then Omah Wood got the best of it by six lengths. She could not hold her lead, however, and near to home was overtaken by Blitzen's sister, who won by a length and a half, with Juanita third.

The fourth race, the Golden Rod stakes, was captured by Nick, a 2 to 1 horse, who put up a game fight with Laureate for it. Laureate led all the way round into the stretch, but Nick won sixty yards from home and finished a length and a half to the good. May Thompson ran third.

The last race was a hard one for the talent to tackle and all the horses were played considerably. Harry Duke, however, had it his own way all the time, and won as he pleased from Sligo, with Johnny McHale, the outside horse, third.

GENTLEMEN'S DRIVING CLUB.

An Afternoon of Good Racing at the Forest Park Track.

The Gentlemen's Driving Club gave a most successful matinee Saturday afternoon.

Unusual interest was taken in the Forest Park Cottage stake. State Senator R. D. Lancaster's bay mare Bertha captured the money after fighting the finishes with Louis Spelbrink's King Mack. Both these gentlemen drove their own horses. The first race on the card made R. E. Lasher happy, his good horse Roy winning the necessary heats in good style from Pauline Carnegie.

The second race brought out three good ones. Jannie Shelton lasted longest and won a most creditable race from Kate C., Mr. Cudmore's mare being hardly ready for such a hard race. The other races were postponed until next Saturday, when a first-class programme will be provided for the entertainment of the public by this popular club.

Phil Sheridan Dead.

RACINE, Wis., July 18.—Phil Sheridan, one of the most noted trotting horses in the country, died last evening. He was 30 years of age and was owned by Stephen Bulle, the well-known manufacturer of this city. Sheridan was known as the fastest horse that ever drew a sleigh, having a record of 2:26 on the road. His record was made over twenty years ago, and has remained as the mark to this day.

BROWNS PLAYED PERFECT BALL.

BREITENSTEIN PITCHED WELL—FAULTLESSLY SUPPORTED.

PARROTT'S GREAT BATTING.

"Tacky" Tom's Big Club Was Responsible for Four of the Browns Runs—Other Games.

Breitenstein won yesterday's game from Brooklyn. The entire team helped him well both in the field and at the bat. The Browns played faultlessly through the entire game. They were not guilty of a single error or misplay of any sort. Indeed they were painfully proper. Yet it was not an interesting game, though the Brooklynites played a very superior article of ball.

Breitenstein was as steady as a reformed and recently married rake. He pitched ball from start to finish and was given the support he deserved.

The Grooms (they are grandfathers now) got hits off him. Two of these were home runs into the chute lake. Both hits would only have been good for doubles had the fence been a foot higher. They were line drives from the bats of Daly and Griffin. Each bounded forty feet inside the fence and went over on the second bound. Fortunately there was no Brooklyite on the bases on either occasion. If there had been there would probably be a different tale to tell to-day.

As has already been stated all the Browns played good ball. Still Joe Sullivan and Tom Clamps Parrott did a little better than any of them.

Sullivan's playing was wonderfully fine. He got a home run into the lake, a safe bunt, a single to left and a sacrifice. In addition to all this he stole two bases, scored two runs and cut off a home run by a lovely running catch.

Sullivan was, with Turner, traded for Dick Cooley. Mr. Cooley is a great ball player and a first-class fellow, but in justice it must be admitted that as an exponent of the game of base ball he is not in the same class as Sullivan. He could not hit to all parts of the field, he could not cover the same ground on fly balls and grounders and above all he could not throw half as well. After the way in which St. Louis has repeatedly been given the worst of recent trades it looks foolish to talk about St. Louis getting the best of it, but truly it does appear as if Joe Sullivan was more than worth two Cooleys. Then Tuck Turner, a first-class man, was thrown in.

Maybe you think that Tom Parrott was not in the game right up to his Adam's apple.

The tall bulrush of the Willamette, the old and original mossback of the League, played the game of his life. In fact, he played so well that it was impossible to tell whether he or Breitenstein or Sullivan, or the rest of the Browns won it. Of one thing, however, you may rest assured, and that is that Tom did more than his share.

The Oregonian wind-jammer was directly responsible for four of the Browns' eight runs. He drove them in with his mighty club. He got three hits out of four chances. The odd time he sent the ball at the shortstop, so hard that had it not taken a nice, long bound, it would have torn an arm off the fielder.

One of Tom's great drives was a triple to right center. It brought in two men with the Browns' first runs. Another was a double that scored another run. The third was a fearful crack plump at Tom Daly, the sturdy, plucky second baseman of the Grooms, a man who would tackle a projectile shot from an eighty-ton gun. The ball came so hard that Daly could not handle it. His hands were thrown aside by it, and it nearly broke his leg before it carromed away to deep center.

Oh, Tom can hit. If some of the infielders are not more careful about taking liberties with his grounders they will be put out of the business, that's all. Anson, Milligan, Kelly, Connor, Delehanty, Lange, Clements, Duffy all the big hitters ever known to base ball, were love-tappers compared with the only and original "Tacks," the triple-jointed, double-breasted, cast-iron pitcher-killer from the banks of the far Willamette.

In the field Tom is a three-ringed circus. He robbed the Brooklyns of a home-run and three incipient base hits. And throw! Why he can throw three-sixes oftener and faster than any man in the League. Before the game started he indulged in a series of throwing matches with each individual member of the Brooklyn team and beat them all. A barrel of monkeys is a funeral procession compared with Thomas W. Parrott, boy, of Portland, Ore.

Morgan Murphy's playing was praiseworthy. The little catcher is doing great work just now. Not since he was the star catcher of the country, in 1891, has he shown finer form. His throwing is faultless, while his work on close plays at the plate is a revelation in celerity of action. On foul balls he is unapproachable.

Meyers had little to do. Monte Cross hit well and played a fine short.

Captain Dowd signalized his return to the game by making two hits and fielding well. Roger Connor was in the game with his bat and mitt.

Abbey, the Brooklyn pitcher, was very easy, and the Browns got to him in good style. His support was out of sight. Mike Griffin carried off all the honors for the representatives of Lesser New York.

The crowd was of very fair proportions, and was quite enthusiastic when the occasion warranted it. But it was a dull, tiresome game, even if it was faultlessly played, and the Browns did win.

POST-DISPATCH BASE BALL TEAM

Will Play the Chronicle Nine at Sportsman's Park Sunday Morning.

Two base ball teams, selected from the employes of the Post-Dispatch and the Chronicle, will play a game of base ball at Sportsman's Park this morning at 9:30. The game will be for the press championship of Missouri and will be to a finish. No charge will be made at the gate. The teams will line up as follows:

Post-Dispatch—Burbach, 3b; Miles, s.s.; McBride, c.; Chaudet, 1b.; Harris, 2b.; Dillon, c.f.; Sheridan, l.f.; Fitzsimmons, r.f.; Keenoy, p.

Chronicle—Rickson, 1b.; "Buck Ewing," 2b.; Reddy, s.s.; Balthaser, 3b.; Walden, l.f.; Bellairs, c.f.; Schietlin, r.f.; Cochran, c.; Martin, p.

Base Ball Notes.

Billy Earle, the little globe trotter, has another engagement. He is now a full-fledged member of the champion Baltimore team. He signed a contract with the Orioles yesterday, and took part in the preliminary practice with the visitors. The Baltimores are weak in the catcher's department at the present time. Robinson had his finger amputated at Louisville, and Hanlon was forced to engage some one to bridge over. Earle was idle here, and he signed a contract. This makes the sixth league team that Earle has played with. He was once with the Reds, next with the Browns, then the Pittsburgs, next the Brooklyns, then the Louisvilles, and now with the Baltimores.

SINKS IN A SACK.

Prof. John Clark Will Do Some Swimming in the River.

Prof. John T. Clark, the New Orleans swimming expert, will give a free exhibition of his skill in the river this afternoon about the time the excursion boats get ready to pull out. The Professor has quite a record as a swimmer and a life saver extending over a period of thirty years. He is now about fifty years old, but as hale and hearty as he ever was.

His special performance is a rather odd one. He dresses himself up in as many suits of clothes as he can get on and then has himself tied up securely in a sack. When packed up in this manner generally with a fifty pound rock in the bottom of the sack he has himself dumped into the water where it is good and deep. As soon as he is under he rips open the sack and appears without it. He sinks again and comes up with the outside suit of clothes in his hand. Then he goes down again and takes off the next, continuing the performance until he has divested himself of all but his bathing clothes. When he has finished with his old clothes trick he gives exhibitions of fancy and useful styles of swimming.

Tennis on the Thames.

LONDON, July 18.—In the All-England tennis championship tournament at Wimbledon to-day, Mahoney beat Eaves 6-2, 6-2, 11-9 in the finals.

A RUSSIAN LOAN.

Report That It Has Been Floated at 3 Per Cent.

BERLIN, July 18.—It is understood that negotiations for floating a Russian 3 per cent gold loan of 400,000,000 francs have been concluded with the Rothschilds, Bleichroeder, Disconto-Gesellschaft, Mendelssohn and a number of Russian bankers. The issue is expected about July 20.

TOM COOPER BEAT BALD.

CIRCUIT RACES AT DETROIT PRODUCED SOME GOOD SPORT.

MILE TRIPLET RECORD CUT.

O'Connor Winesett and Houst Made the Mile in 1:56—Former Record Was 2:01—Cycling News.

DETROIT, Mich., July 18.—A crowd of 4,000 saw the second day bicycle races of the National Circuit meet at Windsor today. The weather was fine, with scarcely any breeze. Two world's records were smashed. The Morgan & Wright triple team, O'Connor, Winesett and Houst, making the mile in 1:56, lowering the record from 2:01.

Earl Osborn lowered the quarter-mile, 10-year-old record of :29 4-5, held by himself, by two seconds.

A great cheer went up when it was announced that Tom Cooper had entered in the mile open race. He was fresh after his rest of yesterday and won the first heat handily by a length. In the second heat the finish was very exciting. Kimble led into the stretch with Scherin and Bald close up. They remained in this position up to within twenty yards of the tape, when Scherin got the lead and held it, the three finishing wheels apart.

Winesett set a fast pace in the final, but Cooper nearly caught him at the quarter and Kimball and Bald were close up. They kept strung out to the stretch, when Bald and Kimble pulled up to Cooper. About twenty yards from the tape Cooper pulled away and won by half a wheel, with Kimble second, the same distance ahead of Bald. The time, 2m. 10 2-5s., is considered fast for a dirt track.

J. J. Blouin of Detroit made a great finish in the 2m. 20s. class professional, winning the event by a tire from Hicks of Bay City. H. C. Clark and L. C. Johnson, the 100 yard men in the two mile handicap, ran together the entire distance, Johnson winning by a scant tire.

2:20 class, professional, one mile—J. J. Blouin, Detroit, won; Fred Hicks, Bay City, second; E. C. Johnson, Cleveland, third. Time, 2:13 3-5.

Amateur, two-mile handicap, final—Edward Rainier, Toledo, (210 yards), won; Harry B. Marsh, Dowagiac, (scratch), second; Robert F. Schmid, Detroit, (210 yards), third. Time, 4:49.

Amateur, one mile, tandem—Edson and Blouin, Detroit, won; Wood and McIntyre, Cleveland, second; J. Moross and E. O. Moross, Detroit, third. Time, 2:21.

PARSONS COMING.

He Is the Australian Cyclist Who Beat Zimmerman.

NEW YORK, July 18.—J. W. Parsons, the Australian racing man, who is at present in Europe, cabled to-day that he would leave London next week for this country, where he will ride during the latter part of the season.

Parsons defeated Zimmerman, the American champion, during the latter's trip to that country last year. Besides Parsons, Michael, the Welshman, and Tesna, the Swiss, are expected to be of the party.

DETROIT DRIVING CLUB.

W. W. P. Touches His Own Record at the Northern Track.

DETROIT, Mich., July 18.—The opening of the third season of racing at the Detroit Driving Club's splendid track at Grosse Pointe was characterized by the fastest mile ever paced on that track in a race. W. W. P. went round in 2:05½, equalling his own record, lowering the track racing record from 2:06¼, done by Coleridge last year, and winning $1,000 for the mile dash. Dan Q., the small bay pacer from Ypsilanti, repeated his recent success at Chicago by winning the other pacing event in straight heats, although he was not driven to equal his Chicago time of 2:10¾. He did, however, pace what are believed to be the fastest three consecutive heats ever paced by a 3-year-old.

Some 3,000 persons were present in spite of threatening skies, and the betting was fairly lively, especially on the event of the day the free-for-all pacing mile dash, which was an innovation in harness racing. The air was still, the track in fine condition. The races opened with a 2:21 trot. Dick Hubbard, who went to the post the favorite, won out after letting Copeland and Dick Wells get away ahead of him in the first heat. Copeland gave Hubbard some close finishes in the last heats. Little Dan Q.'s steady work, and the ease with which he left the field were the features of the 2:25 pace. He was not urged at any time, although closely chased by Fairyview in the two first heats, but he was given his head in the last half of the last heat, and got around easily in 2:12.

The race of the day came last. It was a mile dash free for all pacing for $1,000, the non-winners to compete next Friday, best three heats for the remainder of the purse, $500. Frank Agan was the favorite at [illegible] 5; Rubinstein, 5 to 2; W. W. P., 5 to 2. The five noted pacers got away quickly with Rubinstein ahead of the field, W. W. P. and Agan not far behind. Rubinstein kept his lead clear past the three-quarters. Time at the quarters being :31¼, 1:03, 1:34. W. W. P., however, came into the stretch with a rush and paced under the wire a half length ahead of Agan with Rubinstein another length behind, both Agan and Rubinstein having broken badly in the home stretch. Rubinstein was three lengths ahead of Saladin with Coleridge a length and a half behind Saladin. Summaries:

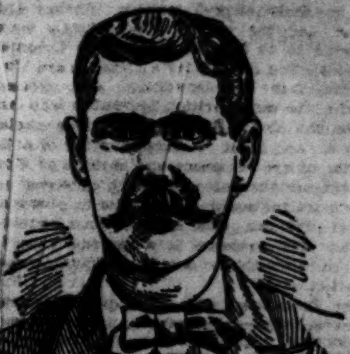
NO CURE—NO PAY.

The Above Are the Only Conditions Upon Which the Physicians of the Missouri Medical Institute Accept Patients for Treatment.

If we cannot cure you we will be honest to tell you so. On the other hand, if we tell you that we can cure you, and fail to do so, our professional services, or the medicines which you use while under treatment, will not cost you one penny. Other physicians want you to pay them whether they cure you or not, or whether they benefit you or not. We only want pay for a cure.

The following statement from Mr. Henry Schulz, a well-known and highly respected gentleman of the southern portion of the city, speaks for itself. Call upon or write to Mr. Schulz and learn from his own lips or pen whether or not same is true and genuine. He will treat you in a courteous manner.



MR. HENRY SCHULZ.

I was afflicted for years with Nervous Debility. I consulted with numerous physicians, but none of them seemed to be able to get at the root of the trouble. One would treat me for one thing, and another for another. Some would help me for a time, but as soon as I quit the treatment I would be in the same shape as before. Other physicians seemed to do me more harm than good.

I was very weak and nervous, had pains in my head and back. Had no ambition, did not care for society, preferring to be left alone. Was bashful and would flush up in company. I could not content myself in any one place for any length of time. Was irritable and cross, and had a foreboding that something wrong was going to happen, and imagined things that were not so. I was also bothered with a shortness of breath and a fluttering of the heart. My sleep was not refreshing, and I felt tired and worn out in the morning. I grew weaker and weaker and more despondent each day, and had about given up all hope of ever getting well when a friend who had been cured at the Missouri Medical Institute recommended me there. Following his advice I took treatment at said Institute, and I have had cause to rejoice for so doing, for the eminent and gentlemanly physicians of said Institute have literally made a new man of me. Where all was darkness and despair, there is now LIGHT and HOPE. I can now eat well, sleep well, and get up in the morning feeling refreshed and full of life and energy. To get out and hustle for business is now a pleasure. I tell you I feel as though I cannot say half enough in favor of these able physicians, for they have certainly done wonders for me. I feel better now than I ever did in my life. In fact, I would not want to feel any better, and I believe the cure is permanent. All I can say is, and what I say to all my afflicted friends, if you need scientific treatment, go to the Missouri Medical Institute.

GERMAN SCANDAL COMING OUT.

SERIOUS CHARGES AGAINST HERR VON PUTTKAMER.

GOVERNOR OF CAMEROONS.

Brutal Atrocities and Vicious Conduct Alleged and an Investigation to Follow.

BERLIN, July 18.—Another colonial scandal is on the point of exploding. Herr Von Puttkamer, Governor of the German Cameroons, is accused of having committed many acts of inhumanity and cruelty similar to those alleged against Whelan and Leist, and for which those officials were ordered to be dismissed from the Colonial service. Von Puttkamer's accusers are Von Stettin, late Vice-Governor, and Goesebrecht, the same British journalist who exposed the abuses in the Cameroons under Whelan and Leist. A large number of affidavits of eye-witnesses and victims of Von Puttkamer's brutality, with the strongest of corroborative evidence, are now in possession of a German paper and will soon be published. The evidence is so strong that it will be impossible to avoid an official investigation.

Von Puttkamer, who was appointed to his office only eleven months ago, is accused of having committed the most horrible atrocities upon both male and female natives of the Cameroons, of vile excesses and of financial speculation of a shady character. Rumors of this have been current in colonial circles for some time. Additional evidence against the governor is in the hands of two members of the Left, and it will be laid before the Reichstag when that body reassembles in the form of an interpellation of the Government.

The rejection of the margarine bill by the Federal Council has deeply angered the whole Agrarian party.

The Deutschlager Zeitung, the organ of the Federation of Husbandry, bitterly reproaches the Government for its failure to support suffering Agrarians with either big means or little means.

A bill was introduced in the Diet to increase the salaries of all Governmental employes in Prussia. This would involve a total of 20,000,000 marks to start with. A similar bill will be introduced in the Bundesrath and in the Reichstag to increase the salaries of imperial officials and likewise those of army officers from the grade of First Lieutenant upwards.

A cavalry captain named Baron Von Ehrhardt and First Lieutenant Von Kempts of the garrison at Dusseldorf, have been dismissed from the army because they refused to accept a challenge to fight a duel with pistols which was sent to them by a notorious scoundrel. Both officers published the facts as an advertisement in a Dusseldorf newspaper.

Empress Augusta and six of the Imperial Princes may be seen daily bicycle riding in the park at Elms Rohe. This is new sport for the Empress, but under the tuition of her two oldest sons, both of whom are expert bicyclists and on a machine specially built for her and under the Emperor's directions, she is making rapid progress.

At Mayence the long-distance march of the Thirty-seventh and Eighty-eighth regiments was marked by forty-eight cases of sunstroke, of which sixteen were immediately fatal. In the maneuvers at Caputh thirteen soldiers fell dead. Similar cases are reported from South Germany.

The Reichsanzeiger publishes a statement of the fiscal operations of the Government for the years '95-'96 showing an excess in the ordinary revenues of the Empire amounting to 26,227,387 marks over the estimate, of which sum 1,357,796 marks will be used to cover the increased expenditures and 13,000,000 marks applied to reducing the imperial debt.

A contagious disease of the eyes, the origin and characteristics of which are puzzling the physicians, is spreading in Upper Silesia. At Beuthen it became necessary to close the high school and a number of other schools have been closed throughout the province. The victims of this disease are rendered totally blind.

Herr Richter, the German Commissioner to the Paris Exposition of 1900, was the first of the Commissioners on the spot and met with a cordial reception from Director as occupied at the Columbian Exposition. Herr Richter reported that the space allowed Germany, while not quite as much as is occupied at the Columbian Exposition, is more than has been given any foreign nation. The Emperor and the German Government intended to make the section finer and intrinsically more valuable than that at the Chicago Exposition. The appropriation for the Paris exhibition is much larger than that made for Chicago, which makes the proposed improvement possible. Herr Richter's report of his preliminary visit will be rendered to the Emperor next week. It is intended to divide the German exhibition into four departments, and that instruction in hygiene, chemistry and electricity shall be among the strongest features.

Thunderstorms, hurricanes and hailstorms have devastated various districts in Germany during the past week, especially in Hesse, Mecklenberg, Mosselle regions and around Colmar. In the vicinity of Lubeck wind and lightning destroyed forty buildings and killed twelve people. The vineyards at Demoselle and Saarh Valleys suffered enormous damage, especially those of Castraber, Graacher and Treves.

Prof. Eseling, President of the Veterinary Surgeons College, will start for the United States next week. He is commissioned by the Berlin Criminal Court as an expert to examine the mare Bethel, which R. K. Kneebs, the American horseman, is alleged to have raced in this country under the name of Nelly Kneebs. The mare is now said to be on Kneebs' stud farm in Nebraska. Prof. Eseling will examine witnesses and ascertain all the facts possible bearing on the now famous Kneebs case. He is expected to return to Berlin in October.

Among the Americans who are in Berlin at present are ex-Gov. Frank Brown of Maryland, A. V. Mann of Muskegon, Mich.; J. O. Lane, president of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, and the Rev. Dr. McVicker of Philadelphia.

Hamburg is fairly full of those who prefer to avoid the crush of the society season at that famous health resort. Many of those present are participating in a tennis tournament organized by officers of the German army, and in which Prince Albert of Schleswig-Holstein is an active spirit. The Prince of Wales is expected to arrive at Hamburg on Aug. 14 and to remain three weeks.

JUNIOR DAY.

Children Turn Out at the B. Y. P. U. Convention.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., July 18.—To-day was Junior Day at the B. Y. P. U. Convention. The afternoon meeting was the only joint session, the morning being given to department rallies and the whole programme consisted of junior work. The children were all there, departmental children in general, and Ma Tha Wa in particular, the little Indian girl who stood before the vast audience and sang in her own tongue so prettily yesterday.

The department rallies this morning were all successful. Rev. S. C. Wallace of Toronto presided at the Summerfield Church over the Department of the Red. Rev. J. W. Conley of St. Paul led at Plymouth Church and Rev. Charles Ness of Baltimore at the First Baptist Church.

President Whitman of Columbia University presented the three prize banners for Junior work. They were to Wisconsin, Michigan and Illinois as follows: Bible readers' course to the First Baptist Church, Eau Claire, Wis.; Conquest Missionary course, Eighteenth Street Baptist Church, Detroit, Mich.; Sacred Literary course, First Baptist Church, Austin, Ill.

The convention will close to-morrow. The morning services in the various churches in the city are to be nearly all conducted by visiting clergymen.

THE LAKE GOT LOOSE.

And a Section of Kansas City Was Flooded.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 10.—A flood unparalleled in Kansas City for its suddenness and volume of water poured down the ravines of either side of Vine street late this afternoon, inundating houses, tearing away street embankments and doing damage. It filled the lake in Troost Park to overflowing and in their excitement the two watchmen guarding the sluice opened the sluice gates too wide and the torrent swept down the water shed into Vine street. No lives were lost. The fire department was called out and went to the rescue of women and children imprisoned in their homes. The flood was caused by a rain of 2.8 inches within an hour and a half.

USED A KNIFE.

Peter Knapcht Slashed Wm. S. Richmond on the Arm.

William S. Richmond and Peter Knapcht quarreled in a saloon at 1439 North Twenty-first street at 10 o'clock last night.

Knapcht drew his knife and slashed Richmond across the arm cutting a gash two inches long and one inch deep.

Knapcht escaped. He is 18 years old and lives on O'Fallon street between Twentieth and Twenty-first streets. Richmond is 21 years old and lives at 2012 Cass avenue.

THERE WAS NO FIGHT.

Frank Devoto Seems to Have No Reason for This Attack.

Robt. Leimbach, who was reported Saturday to have fought over a can of beer with Frank Devoto at 800 South Second street, says that statement is incorrect. There was no fight over a can of beer, but he was attacked by Devoto, whom he never saw before, without any cause whatever, and don't know now what prompted Devoto to assault him.

MADISON FOR STEPHENS.

W. S. Anthony for Congress Is Badly Beaten.

FREDERICKTOWN, Mo., July 18.—Township conventions were held in this county to-day to select delegates to a county convention next Saturday to elect delegates to the State, Judicial and Congressional conventions. An active canvass has been going on here for a week by W. S. Anthony, Ed Robb and T. M. Carter for instructions for Congress. Martin Cape of Dent County also has friends in the county. Proceedings at last took the shape of the field against Anthony, who is Assistant United States District Attorney, and in the convention held to-day for St. Michaels Township Anthony was overwhelmingly beaten.

Nine delegates were selected to the county convention, equally divided between Robb, Carter and Cape, and this is likely to be the character of the delegation that will be sent to the Congressional convention from this county. Resolutions indorsing Bryan and Sewall, and Lon V. Stephens for Governor, were unanimously adopted. Several Populists joined in the vote for Bryan and Sewall.

LI HUNG IS COMING.

Will Arrive Sept. 18 and Will Be Royally Entertained by the President.

Special to The Post-Dispatch.

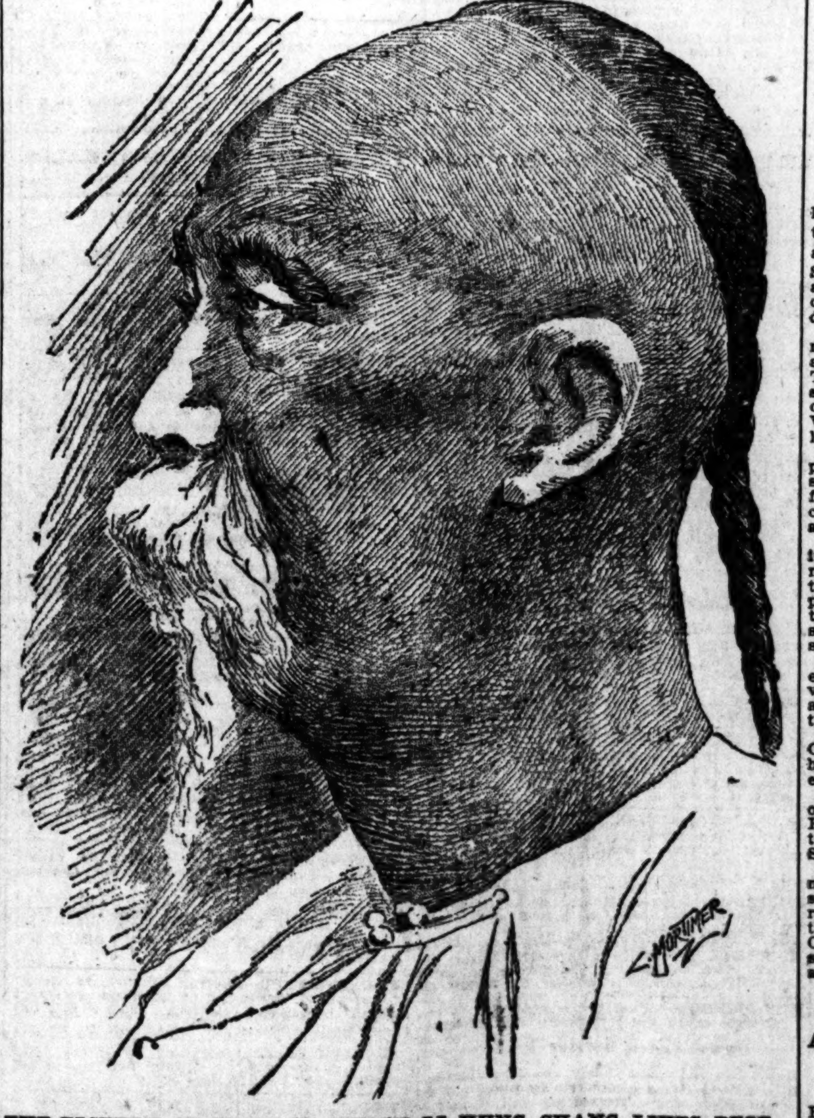
WASHINGTON, D. C., July 18.—Li Hung Chang will get a reception by the government officers here as elaborate as that extended to Princess Eulalie in 1893. The visit of the Chinese Viceroy has been the subject of active correspondence between Secretary Olney and the Chinese Legation, and their plans have now been perfected. Li Hung Chang had expected to arrive here the last of this month, but has now postponed his visit because of the absence of the President fishing at Gray Gables.

October was a little too late for the Chinese diplomat, as he wishes to reach the Pacific Coast, en route home, about that time, and he did not desire to pass through the United States without being received by the President. Mr. Cleveland thereupon compromised matters and instructed Mr. Olney to make all arrangements for Li Hung Chang's reception here on September 18, the day when he is now expected to reach Washington.

While here, Li Hung Chang will be under the special care of First Assistant Secretary of State Rockhill, who lived in China for years as one of the Secretaries of the Legation, and is the only officer in the department who speaks Chinese fluently.

Li Hung Chang will be quartered at a hotel, and while there is no appropriation to pay for the entertainment of foreigners, no matter how distinguished, it is not improbable that the contingent fund of the department may be drawn upon to help entertain Li Hung Chang and his big suite while here. It is now settled that the President will give a dinner in honor of the distinguished visitor, to which all the diplomats and prominent officers will be invited. Li Hung Chang will probably give a dinner in return.

It is probable that the United States Cavalry at Fort Meyer will be ordered out on the day of his arrival to escort him to his quarters, and a detail of army or naval officers will be assigned to be with him during his stay in the United States. Li Hung Chang, it is understood, brings with him important communications from his government to the President. These are said to consist of a long message of thanks from the Emperor for the services of this Government during the Chinese-Japanese war, together with expressions of good will for the prosperity of this country. The exchange of civilities between the President and the diplomat will be as impressive as those generally following the reception of a foreign Ambassador to this Government.



THE PICTURE OF HIMSELF WHICH LI HUNG CHANG LIKES BEST.

FIRE DESTROYS MALVERN, ARK.

LOSS HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS.

CAUSED BY INCENDIARIES.

A Report of Lynching Was Erroneous, but a Number of Men Are Under Arrest.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 18.—The town of Malvern, Ark., at the junction of the Hot Springs Railway, was almost entirely wiped out by fire at an early hour this morning.

Malvern was a little city of about 6,000 inhabitants, the business portion of the place being clustered around the railroad station. All this section was destroyed, only three business houses remaining.

The total loss is variously estimated at from $200,000 to $400,000, only a small portion of which is covered by insurance. The burned buildings include the railroad depot, two hotels, the bank and all the principal business houses of the place.

The fire is without doubt the result of a plot to destroy the town. The blaze broke out about midnight in three different places, and as there was no apparatus, the fire burned itself out.

The loss is approximately as follows: E. Adams, $50,000, fully insured; S. W. Smith, $1,000, no insurance; Hughes & McRay, $25,000, partially insured; W. H. Cooper & Bro., $15,000, insurance, $8,000; H. A. Butler, $10,000, insurance, $5,000; H. Barnett, $3,200, no insurance; Powell Carden, $5,000, no insurance; Mrs. David Smith, $800, no insurance. Wm. Duffie, loss, $10,000; no insurance. Iron Mountain Railway Depot, loss, $1,000. R. Clary, loss, $4,500; insurance, $500. A. M. Duffie, $3,000; no insurance. Rhoden and Miller, $2,000; no insurance. E. E. Emerson, $2,000; no insurance. W. D. Alexander, $1,600; no insurance. Bank of Malvern, $4,000; partially insured. Mrs. L. D. McCammon, $1,000; no insurance. Robinson & Dyer, $500; no insurance. Jacob & Son, $500; no insurance. Mart Phelps, $100; no insurance; J. E. Chamberlain, $5,000; partly insured.

A passenger from Malvern reports that six negroes were arrested, charged with setting fire to the town.

It was reported this afternoon that a negro had been lynched, but this proves erroneous.

No one was actually lynched this morning, but a white tramp came near forfeiting his life in an endeavor to filch money from the excited citizens. He remarked in a crowd that for the consideration of $300 he would reveal the identity of the firebugs. He was promptly answered with the remark that he would divulge the information at a more reasonable figure. Somebody procured a rope and the crowd seized the tramp and proceeded to string him up to force the information from him, but he then protested that he knew nothing about the crime, and begged piteously for his life. He and a pal were then locked up.

Every tramp or suspicious character found around the town was promptly arrested. Four men, two white and two negroes, are believed to have been implicated in the crime, and it seems that they went about their work in a systematic manner.

The fire was first started in a cottage in the suburbs about 11 o'clock last night. The blaze attracted the attention of the people, and while efforts were being made to extinguish it, the torch was applied to the business portion of the city in several places simultaneously, and before the people were hardly aware of it, the whole town was in flames. When the fire had burned itself out, the only business house left standing was that occupied by Berger's store. Every effort is being made to apprehend the incendiaries, and if positive evidence against any of the men under arrest can be secured there is hardly a doubt that they will be lynched.

Sheriff D. C. Fitzhugh of Hot Springs County to-night brought to the pen at Little Rock Eugene Ingraham, U. Miller and Cass Williams, the three men arrested at Malvern on the charge of being the firebugs who put the torch to that town last night. Ingraham and Miller are white and Williams is a negro. Sheriff Fitzhugh says that no negro was lynched but he considered it necessary to place the prisoners in the penitentiary for safe keeping. He had considerable trouble in getting his prisoners on the train as the crowd was anxious to get possession of them. Williams has confessed complicity in the crime and implicated the two white men. He says it was done for the purpose of plunder and that had they not been frightened away a good haul would have been made.

BLAND PIONEERS.

Big Crowd of Eleventh Ward Democrats Ratify the Ticket in Enthusiastic Style.

The Eleventh Ward Pioneer Bland Club had an enthusiastic ratification meeting at the northwest corner of Virginia avenue and Meramec street last night. Bryan and Sewall gave the speakers their keynote and they sang the praises of the Democratic National ticket to an applauding audience.

At 8:30 o'clock the club formed at its rooms, Nebraska avenue and Osage street, and marched to the place of the meeting. The members and the speakers took possession of a tastefully arranged platform on top of a large shed and the Eleventh Ward Democrats gathered in the street below in goodly numbers.

The fact that the Eleventh Ward is a Republican stronghold did not discourage the speakers, but on the contrary gave them food for oratorical appeals to the Democratic voters to carry the ward for Bryan and Sewall.

President Victor Gerhart called the meeting to order and introduced W. T. Scanlon, a member of the club. Mr. Scanlon reviewed the past of the Democratic and Republican parties, compared the platforms on which the present campaign is being fought and spoke in glowing terms of the Democratic standard bearers.

President Gerhart followed with a lucid explanation of what 16 to 1 means. He reviewed the financial history of the country and demonstrated that the silver dollar was the unit of value until 1873.

Joseph F. Dieckman, Democratic Central Committeeman for the ward, exhorted his hearers to sweep the Republicans from power in the Eleventh.

Nat Easton, who said that he was an organizer of the People's party, Frank Phelan and R. F. Merryman paid high tributes to the personal worth of Bryan and Sewall.

The principal address of the evening was made by Hon. H. Martin Williams, who scored the Republicans for their financial record, and scorched the newspapers and the Wall street Democrats who bolted the Chicago platform and ticket. He made a strong argument in favor of the free coinage of silver.

WILL REVOLUTIONIZE MUSIC.

A Cincinnati Man Will Correct False Tones in the Piano.

CINCINNATI, O., July 18.—Dr. S. A. Hageman of this city has applied for a patent on an invention which promises to create a sensation among musicians. It is a mechanism to be applied to the piano for the purpose of correcting the false tones of that instrument which have hitherto been regarded as a necessary evil. The invention makes a piano as true as the violin, and it accomplishes the result by a sort of mechanical fingering similar to the human fingering of the violin. Competent musicians say the problem has been successfully solved. The inventor is a half brother of the late Prof. David Swing of Chicago.

MACEO'S VICTORY.

The Cuban Forces Defeat the Spanish and Captured Inclan, Killing 300 of Hir Men.

KEY WEST, Fla., July 18.—The Spaniards, under Gen. Suarez Inclan, have sustained a crushing defeat at the hands of the Insurgents under Antonio Maceo. Not only was Inclan's column defeated with heavy loss, but it is currently reported in Havana that the Spanish general himself was captured and is now held as a prisoner by Maceo.

The battle is said to have occurred on July 15, near Maceo's stronghold, in the province of Pinar del Rio. For the last two weeks the insurgents have been very aggressive, and small parties have repeatedly attacked the Trocha, causing the Spaniards much annoyance. Gen. Inclan was ordered to drive back these detached bands of insurgents and for this purpose took with him 2,000 men. Maceo seems to have expected such a movement, and arranged to ambush the Spaniards. He stationed a large force in a favorable position and ordered his detached bands to draw Inclan into the fray. The Spaniards followed the insurgent skirmishers incautiously and fell into the ambush. Then the Cubans opened fire from all sides, which therewith threw the Spanish into confusion. While the Spaniards were thus disordered the Cubans charged, completely routing their foes.

Gen. Inclan made a desperate effort to rally his demoralized forces, but was surrounded by the Cubans and compelled to surrender.

It is said in Havana that the Spaniards were pursued almost to the Trocha and lost more than 300 men killed and wounded. There were fourteen officers among the killed.

Cubans here also say that Maceo will hold Inclan as hostage to save the lives of prominent insurgent officers who have been captured by the Spaniards. One of these officers is Capote. If this rebel leader is shot by the Spaniards, it is said Inclan will meet the same fate at the hands of Maceo.

YELLOW FEVER RAGING.

There Were 177 Deaths From Yellow Jack in the Last Ten Days in June.

HAVANA, July 18.—Twenty-six volunteers from Mexico have arrived at Santa Clara and joined the government troops.

Col. Nicanaor Pico has died of yellow fever at Matanzas.

As the result of a skirmish between the troops and insurgents between Havana and Matanzas, the rebels left two officers and twenty privates killed and one officer and eight privates wounded. The government troops took many prisoners. Of the government, five were killed and nine wounded.

During June the military hospitals of the Island accommodated 8,086 sick. Of that number 792 were suffering from yellow fever, 146 from dysentery, 972 from malaria, 72 from typhoid fever and 728 wounded. During the last ten days of June 236 deaths occurred, of which 177 resulted from yellow fever.

ARE IN CONFERENCE.

Teller, Mantle, Pettigrew and Other Silver Men Confer at Manitou.

DENVER, Colo., July 18.—A special to the Republican from Manitou, Colo., says: All of the silver men who are to confer on the great question of how best to unite the silver forces and bring glorious victory out of this campaign of the people against the gold monemetallists, are now here. The members of the conference present include Senators Teller of Colorado, Mantle of Montana, Pettigrew of South Dakota and Dubois of Idaho, Congressmen Hartman of Montana, Wilson of Idaho, Burchinel of West Virginia, Sharoth of Colorado and Hon. A. M. Stevenson of Denver.

The party got together in the rooms of Senator Dubois to-night and informally talked over the situation, discussing every phase of it, each offering suggestions as thought best to prompt the cause of which all are fighting. Senator Teller submitted a draft of an address to the people which he had prepared, and Senator Dubois also offered some additional suggestions to be embodied in the pronunciamento.

Senator Teller stated to the representative of the Republican that, although they had canvassed the situation very thoroughly, they would not be ready to give the address to the press until Sunday evening. It will contain about 2,500 words, fully setting forth the situation and conditions which confront them and which influence the present action. They will unequivocally indorse Bryan and Sewall, giving in detail their reasons therefor, and outlining what they believe to be the best line of campaign for the silver forces. They each expressed the hope that the Populist convention at St. Louis, as well as the Silver convention will, indorse the nominees of the Chicago convention, but they are not particularly encouraged over the present prospects from the Populists. None of them will attend the St. Louis convention.

GAVE HIM SELF UP.

Mike Sullivan Thinks He Accidentally Killed Mike Moran.

Mike Sullivan, a shoemaker, living at 1116 North Twenty-second street, walked into Police Headquarters last night and said he believed that he was the one who was responsible for Michael Moran's death.

Moran was shot in the back at Twenty-second and Division streets the evening of July 4.

Sullivan told the police that he had fired a shot from the doorstep in front of 2130 Division street, and that a second afterward Moran, who was then a stranger to him, dropped to the sidewalk.

James Aylward, 2121 Biddle street, heard the shot and saw Moran fall. It is believed that Sullivan shot Moran accidentally. But as a precaution the police locked Sullivan up until he can be interviewed by Chief Desmond.

EX-GOV. RUSSELL'S FUNERAL.

The Funeral Will Be at Cambridge on Monday.

BOSTON, Mass., July 18.—The body of ex-Gov. William E. Russell arrived to-night on the "Flying Yankee" train from St. John, N. B. The train was stopped at East Somerville and the body was moved to his late home in Cambridge.

The body will lie in state in the Cambridge City Hall Monday from noon until 3 o'clock. The funeral will be held at the Shepard Memorial Church, Cambridge, at 4 p. m. Monday. As the church will hold only about 1,000 persons, admission will be by card. A large crowd gathered at the station as the train rolled in, and it was only by using force that a way could be made through the crowd.

THEY GO FISHING.

Cleveland, Jefferson and Thurber Go to Buzzard's Bay.

BUZZARDS BAY, July 18.—Every day this week has seen President Cleveland down the bay driving dull care away by means of his usual pastime. To-day he was accompanied by Mr. Jos. Jefferson and Mr. Thurber.

A Demented Kansan.

PHILADELPHIA, July 18.—The young man who was found wandering about the streets of this city yesterday in a demented condition was identified to-day as H. C. Spencer, the son of Selma C. Spencer, a wealthy resident of Lawrence, Kan.

THE GAMBLERS ARE EXCITED.

JUDGE WOFFORD'S DECISION THE CAUSE.

DECLARED UNCONSTITUTIONAL

"Texas" Tom Walsh Has Been Convicted Under the Law and Now Wants to Know Where He Is.

The members of the gambling fraternity in St. Louis are all worked up over the decision of Judge Wofford of the Criminal Court of Kansas City, announced in the 6 o'clock Post-Dispatch yesterday evening, declaring unconstitutional the law of 1895, which makes it a crime to bet on horse races outside of the inclosure about the track.

In this decision they see an opening in the pool-room business since the fate of "Texas Tom" Walsh, twice convicted.

It serves as a straw at which they may clutch while floundering about in the ocean of doubt by which they are encompassed.

They are not exactly jubilant, but they are hopeful, and they are anxiously awaiting news of the situation in Kansas City before venturing again in the business that has cost them so dearly.

All of them are hanging upon the word of Tom Walsh, and he will not bat an eyelid until he hears from Kansas City.

When Gambler Biller was taken before Judge Wofford for trial yesterday afternoon the Judge denounced the law as a piece of class legislation, declared it unconstitutional and turned the prisoner loose.

An hour later the news was read in St. Louis in the Post-Dispatch, and speculation at once became rife as to whether Walsh and his confreres would again attempt to run their establishments, in defiance of the police, in view of Judge Wofford's decision.

The question with Walsh was: "Does this decision, which will have to be passed upon by the Supreme Court, affect my cases, both of which are now pending before the same tribunal?"

Thomas was doubtful.

When seen by a Post-Dispatch reporter last night Walsh was in a quandary.

He wanted to reopen his place and had discussed with his friends the advisability of so doing, but he feared to take the step.

"I will wait for news from Kansas City," said Walsh, "and see how the decision pans out there. If it is favorable to the business I may open up again, but for the present I will do nothing.

"I am satisfied that the law is no good, and I will bet 100 to 1 that when my first case comes up before the Supreme Court in October the law will be declared unconstitutional.

"Still, I cannot stand the expense of so many prosecutions. I knew that a test of the law would have to be made, and I was the only one who had the nerve to go up against the game and give the police a chance.

"I can't afford to open up again at present—that's all there is about it. The police of this town are dead against us, and nothing would please Larry more than to get his hands on me again.

"I paid $600 a month rent for three rooms for eight months to have the privilege of running four months, and then got soaked in jail. Eight times six is forty-eight, and that is enough for me for a while, but I would like to get even."

Gov. Charles P. Johnson does not believe that Judge Wofford's decision will stick.

"At all events," said Gov. Johnson to a Post-Dispatch reporter, "it can have no bearing on the case of Tom Walsh. His cause is now before the Supreme Court, and neither the decision of Judge Wofford nor any other Judge than those of the Supreme Court can affect it.

"Judge Wofford's decision is a matter upon which the Supreme Court must pass, just the same as it must pass upon the case of Tom Walsh.

"If the pool sellers open up again they will do so at their own peril, and if the police do their duty they will prosecute every man as vigorously as they have prosecuted Walsh.

"The law of 1895 is all right, and I do not believe that Judge Wofford's position that it is class legislation is tenable.

"It is an outgrowth of the law of 1891, which has never been assailed, prohibiting betting on races run outside of the State.

"Personally I believe that the whole betting system is wrong, and I hope that the next Legislature will hit Mr. Maffitt and his crowd just as hard as the last one hit Walsh and his friends.

"The men who are conducting the races in this town are conducting a business of which they should be ashamed, bearing the respectable names that they do. It results in the ruin of hundreds of young men every year, and the only difference between it and Tom Walsh's business is that the latter is handier to the down-town districts, and therefore easier of access to clerks and others who squander their weekly pittances by undertaking a losing game."

If the Supreme Court decision in October shall be favorable to Walsh the public may expect a return of the palmy days of Pool Alley, when pool-rooms were conducted wide open by the score on Sixth and Seventh streets, between Chestnut and Pine, and in the alley between.

Hundreds of men and boys swarmed about these places, especially during the noon hour, when clerks and other employes of great commercial establishments could steal a few minutes away from their work to place a portion of their meager earnings on some skate they never saw, on the word of a tout for whose veracity no man could vouch.

After the passage of the law of 1895 the police of St. Louis commenced a fight on Pool Alley, and after a long struggle succeeded in cleaning it out.

Tom Walsh, Harry C. Harris and a few other choice spirits held out for a long time, but after repeated arrests, trials and acquittals, and still other arrests, Harris was acquitted, but Walsh was convicted on two counts, a year after the passage of the law.

Tennis Championship.

NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE, Ontario, July 18.—The tennis championship of Canada was won this morning by W. D. Renn of Chicago, who defeated T. P. Fischer of New York by a score of 6-1; 6-3; 7-5.

Fischer has done his strongest work this season on dirt court and the change to the grass courts of the Niagara grounds seriously hampered his play. The surprise of the day was the defeat of Miss Bessie Moore of Ridgewood, N. J., who holds the championship of the United States, by Miss J. Atkinson of Brooklyn.

Miss Moore has won a long series of victories this season, and besides the American championship holds the championship of New Jersey and of the Middle States. Later in the day Miss Atkinson met and defeated Mrs. Sidney Smith, the champion of Canada. The tournament closed to-night with a ball at the Queen's Hotel in honor of the visiting players. The day's score:

Men's singles, final—Wrenn beat Fischer, 6-4, 6-2, 7-5.

Championship round—Wrenn (challenger) beat W. A. Larned, Summit, N. J. (holder), by default.

Ladies' single, final—Miss J. Atkinson, Brooklyn, beat Miss B. Moore, Ridgewood, N. J., 4-6, 6-1, 6-3, 2-6, 6-2.

Championship round—Miss J. Atkinson (challenger) beat Mrs. Sidney Smith, Ottawa (holder), 6-1, 6-1.

Doubles, final—Fischer and Whitman beat Bethel and Davis, 8-6, 6-4, 6-2.

Mixed doubles, final—Fischer and Miss J. Atkinson beat Paret and Miss B. Moore, 6-4, 6-2, 6-4.

BLOODY FIGHT BETWEEN WOMEN.

TWO AMAZONS HACK EACH OTHER TO PIECES WITH KNIVES.

WITNESSED BY HUNDREDS.

End of a Feud Between Annie Chambers and Sadie Williams Which Had Originated in Jealousy.

Two women fought and slashed each other with knives yesterday in the rear of the yard at 1729 North Eleventh street until they were dripping with blood and bare of clothing to their waists.

It was one of the bloodiest and most revolting occurrences in the records of St. Louis crime. It occurred in broad daylight and hundreds of the neighbors perched themselves on the fences, leaned over the railings of back porches and climbed on the low sheds to watch the slaughter. While some cheered the angry contestants as they exchanged blows and cuts, others shuddered and turned from the scene sick and disgusted.

Annie Chambers is a buxom young woman of 19 years, who lives at 1725 North Eleventh street. She had been stringing the family washing out on the lines in the back yard and was singing merrily at her work, when Sadie Williams, who lives at 1729 North Eleventh street, came out into her back yard and hung over the gate in the fence which divides her yard from the lot where Annie was at work.

It is said there had been rivalry between the two women for some time over the affections of a certain young man. They had each said uncomplimentary things about the other, but yesterday when Sadie leaned on the gate they began a friendly little gossip.

But temper in that district is hot and easily fired. One of them dropped the remark that she had a "rich man on her stain."

"I don't care, I can marry the son of a hotel keeper."

"Supposing you can; he will make you dishwasher."

"He wont."

"He will."

"You're a liar!" and that is the way the fight started.

Each secured a knife and with drawn blades they charged each other in the yard of which Sadie Williams had been the queen.

For five or ten minutes they kept it up; not a whimper passed the lips of either of the women; they punished and stood punishment like prize fighters. The neighbors ran out, but made no attempt to stop the fight.

The women did not tire. They charged, gritted their teeth, but said nothing.

The knife blades ripped and tore the dresses, and when a policeman entered the yard each woman was nude to the waist.

Blood ran in streams down over the scratched skin and saturated the skirts. They were heedless of their wounds and of their condition and as another charge was about to be made the officer rushed between them and with the assistance of several of the men who witnessed the fight, disarmed the amazons and placed them under arrest.

Annie Chambers was cut on the left cheek, the wound extending from between the eye and ear to the corner of the mouth and clear to the bone. Besides that cut she had a half dozen smaller ones about her body and a score of scratches and contusions.

Sadie Williams will probably lose her left hand, her antagonist's knife having circled the wrist and cut a bone cushion. Besides that, there was a gash along her neck and a dozen other cuts and abrasions about her head and body, blood flowing from all of them.

They were both taken to the City Dispensary, North Branch, where their wounds were dressed, after which they were locked up at the Fourth District Police Station. They will probably [illegible] to the City Ho

CAN'T RESIST THE PEOPLE.

THE MIDDLE-OF-THE-ROAD POPULISTS ON THE RUN.

SOME THREATS OF A BOLT.

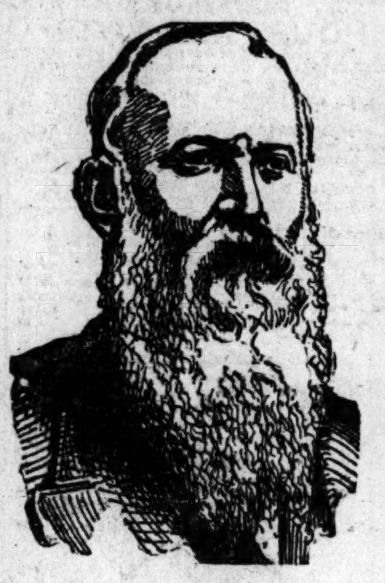
"Town Farmers". See Their Doom Approaching Before the Convention Organization Is Arranged.

The Populist National Convention will be called to order next Wednesday noon by National Chairman Taubeneck.

It will meet in the Auditorium where Mark Hanna's men gathered June 16.

The Populists will have 1,350 delegates and as many alternates, making the convention proper consist of 2,700 members.

The Populist leaders expect to have the hall as well filled as it was when the Republicans put out their single standard gold ticket. They also expect to reap a decided pecuniary advantage from the spectators



SENATOR STEWART.

By putting the tickets for each day at the low price of $1, they anticipate a crowded house for every session. And a neat sum is expected to accrue from the sale of badges to delegates and alternates.

It will cost each delegate 50 cents for the big badge that will adorn his coat. The alternate badge will cost only 25 cents.

The money derived from the sale of tickets and badges will go into the campaign fund.

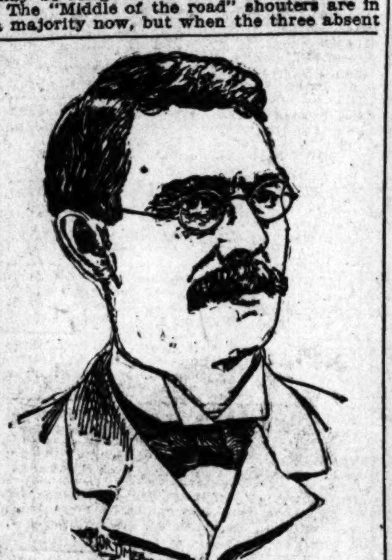
When Chairman Taubeneck calls the convention to order he will introduce the temporary Chairman and will then abdicate.

This temporary Chairman will be selected by the National Committee at its meeting Tuesday, although the man will be virtually named by the National Executive Committee, which held its first meeting Saturday, with only six members present.

"Cyclone" Davis of Texas, who is opposed to fusion, and is for an independent Populist ticket, is the choice of the "Middle of the Road" people.

There is a possibility, however, that the "Cyclone" and his hat, which is a more wonderful creation in felt than that affected by the "Sage of Beaumont Street," may be relegated to the rear.

The "Middle of the road" shouters are in a majority now, but when the three absent members of the committee get here there is a strong probability that United States Senator W. V. Allen of Nebraska may be put forward for both temporary and permanent chairman.



JERRY SIMPSON.

Senator Allen is a strong man, perfectly familiar with parliamentary law.

He is, besides outspoken for the indorsement of Bryan and Sewall and the union of all the free silver forces.

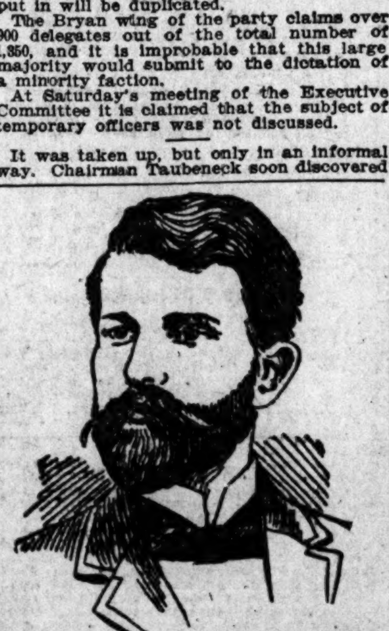
The rank and file of the party are with him and they propose to allow no smooth work on the part of Taubeneck and his followers.

If the anti-Bryan men and the members of the national machine try to run in a temporary chairman, the scene in the Chicago convention when David B. Hill was turned down and Senator Daniel of Virginia put in will be duplicated.

The Bryan wing of the party claims over 900 delegates out of the total number of 1,350, and it is improbable that this large majority would submit to the dictation of a minority faction.

At Saturday's meeting of the Executive Committee it is claimed that the subject of temporary officers was not discussed.

It was taken up, but only in an informal way. Chairman Taubeneck soon discovered that not all the members were with him, and that it was barely possible the "middle of the road" men would have a majority in the full body of nine. [illegible] discovery altered his plans and made [illegible] anxious than ever for a compromise which would prevent his complete [illegible]row. [illegible] realised that he had misjudged the temper of the great body of the Populist party.



MARION BUTLER OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Most of its members are for free silver and to get it they are willing to sacrifice the scheming politicians like Taubeneck and McDowell, who care less for a free silver victory, it would appear, than for holding fat jobs in the National organization.

There is a strong disposition manifested by the delegates to throw out the "town farmers" who have been gradually getting hold of the machinery—and all the offices in sight—and to make the campaign on the sole issue of free silver against the single gold standard.

Chairman Taubeneck comes under the caption "town farmer." So does Sergeant at Arms McDowell, and they are expected to be beautifully "rolled" next week.

When the Populist Convention ends in a ringing indorsement of Wm. J. Bryan, as it is sure to, the town agriculturists who wear diamond studs and silk hats, will be left looking up into Mark Hanna's marble countenance, explaining why and how they failed to prevent the party indorsing the Democratic nominees.

The political snickersnee has been whetting for them for some time. They have managed to escape heretofore because they never came out under true colors.

The "middle of the road" men now threaten to bolt if Bryan is indorsed. They claim to have with them nearly 500 delegates. They come from States south of Mason and Dixon's line, and are fresh from the flesh pots secured by fusion and an abandonment of principle to Republicanism.

The Bryan free silver Populists have analyzed the claims of the prospective bolters and find they are built upon slender foundation.

If a majority of the convention votes to indorse Bryan and free silver the only delegates who will leave the hall will be those who are Republicans in disguise or who long for a piece of the "sound money" which Mark Hanna carries in his mole-skin for good little Pops who do his bidding.

That's the way the situation is sized up by men who know what they are talking about. They place the true estimate upon the men who are now threatening to bolt.

Last night's arrivals were not numerous, but nearly every one who came in was for a straightout indorsement of Bryan and a combination of all the forces of free silver to fight to a finish the combined forces of the single standard advocates.

R. G. Scott, national committeeman from Iowa, has come over to the Bryan standard.

Delegate Bailey of Oklahoma reported the arrival of Oklahoma and Kansas Populist workers for Bryan, and that the rank and file of the Populists of Texas were for him.

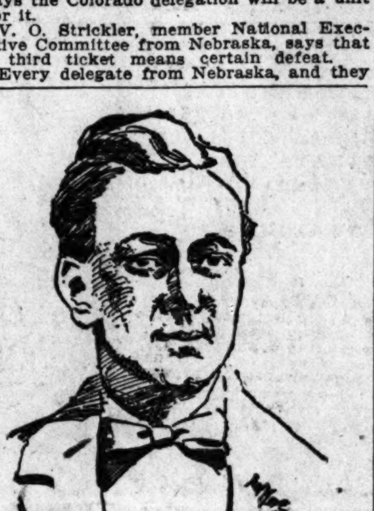
Ignatius Donnelly of Minnesota, who firmly believes that Shakspeare was no more than Bacon's typewriter, is for indorsing Bryan.

R. Winsor of Washington State says that Senator Teller's interview is the keynote of the situation, and that all the delegates from the far West will join Teller and his friends in working for Bryan.

Delegate-at-Large Nicholson of Colorado indorses Senator Teller's view of it, and says the Colorado delegation will be a unit for it.

V. O. Strickler, member National Executive Committee from Nebraska, says that a third ticket means certain defeat.

Every delegate from Nebraska, and they have fifty-eight, headed by Senator Allen, will work for Bryan.



FRED L. BAILEY.
(Delegate from Oklahoma.)

Alabama has left the "middle of the road" contingent. National Executive Committeeman Gaither from that State is for Bryan if the Democrats make concessions.

Chairman Taubeneck and his followers are losing ground so rapidly in their opposition to Bryan that by the time the convention meets they will hardly form a respectable minority.

LEWELLING'S BOOM LAUNCHED

Kansas Populists Indorse Him and Down Jerry Simpson.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WICHITA, Kan., July 18.—Sedgwick County Populists formally launched ex-Gov. Lewelling's gubernatorial boom to-day, adopting the following resolution in their delegate convention:

"We commend the Administration of Gov. Lewelling and admire his fidelity to the cause of the people, through evil and through good reports, and believing in his eminent fitness for the position, we again present him to the people of the State for the nomination for Governor, and hereby instruct the delegation from Sedgwick County to the State Convention at Abilene to make his nomination the chief concern and use all honorable means to secure that result."

An effort to secure an indorsement of Jerry Simpson for the Congressional nomination was defeated after a tumultuous debate lasting over an hour. Simpson is charged with being treacherous to Lewelling and the story is responsible for the former's failure to be indorsed.

Twenty-Third District Populists.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

DEXTER, Mo., July 18.—The Populist Senatorial convention of this, the Twenty-third District, met here to-day and nominated C. D. Bailey of Stoddard County for State Senator by acclamation. Strong resolutions were passed condemning any action that looked to the indorsement of the Democratic nominees by the Populist National convention and declaring against any fusion whatever between the Populists and old parties. The convention was well attended.

Ramsay Populists for Bryan.

Special to The Post-Dispatch.

RAMSEY, Ill., July 18.—The Populists, who are numerous here, are for the endorsement of Bryan and Sewall. George Rogers, ex-County Clerk and a leading Populist politician of Osage County, Kansas, will attend the St. Louis convention next week from here and work for the endorsement of Bryan and Sewall. Mr. Rogers was postmaster at Quenemo, Kan., under Cleveland's first administration, but later espoused the Populist cause and published The People's Herald at Lyndon, Kan. He is an ardent Populist.

Alabama Delegates Coming.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., July 18.—The Populist delegates to the National Convention, headed by Capt. R. F. Kolb, left for St. Louis this afternoon. They all refused to say what they thought would be the outcome, but a personal poll of the delegation elicited the fact that Bryan had many friends in it.

Capt. Kolb refused to commit himself as to whether or not he was for a separate ticket. State Chairman G. B. Deans, delegate-at-large; J. C. Manning and some others are for a separate Populist national ticket for the purpose of maintaing the organization.

John W. Tomlinson, Alabama member of the National Bimetallic League, also left to-day, to attend the Bimetallic Convention. Alabama will have full representation at both conventions.

Chicago Populists.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

CHICAGO, Ill., July 18.—A number of Cook County Populists left this afternoon for the St. Louis convention, committed to the plan of nominating Bryan. In both Democratic and Populistic circles this morning confirmation was had of the rumored fusion between local Democrats and Populists on the county ticket. It hinges on the nomination by the Populists of Gov. Altgeld.

W. J. BRYAN.

I.

In the West a star is risen,
Brightly flaming from on high;
See the wise men gladly follow where it guides.
It is gleaming in its glory
Like a beacon in the sky;
While the people shout for joy
For their victory it betides.

II.

The clanking chains of thousands—
Fettered slaves of British gold—
Are mingled with the people's joyous roar;
But the eye of faith and hope
Turns Westward to behold
The light above the prairies
That shall shine forever more.

III.

Shout, shout, downtrodden thousands,
And join the glad refrain;
Swell the chorus that proclaims the coming day;
Hear the thunders welling grandly
From Florida to Maine;
Rolling Westward o'er the valleys
Till the grandeur of the Rockies
Greets the glory of the plain.

IV.

And the Democratic eagle
Plumes his wings to fly afar;
Mounting upward with the echo's joyful story
Hear him screaming as of old;
For he sees our Western star—
Whose beams are silver golden,
Brightly flaming from on high,
Where it's gleaming in its glory
Like a beacon in the sky.

SILAS PERRY CULBY.

Higginsville, Mo., July 10.

Where the Summer Breezes Blow.

In spite of the fact that the Columbia Excursion Co. has established the almost miraculous record of carrying 12,000,000 passengers, there are still some people who have not taken advantage of the most charming river trips ever offered to the public. It is to these people that this item is addressed. There is no pleasanter, cleaner, healthier form of amusement than an excursion upon the Father of Waters, and now that such a luxury is within the reach of the slimmest purse there is no excuse for the man who stays in the sweltering city and reviles the heat.

The City of Providence—one of the most beautiful boats on the Mississippi—leaves for Montesano Park every day, except Monday, at 9:30 a. m., and returns at 6 p. m. For Sunday excursions the City of Providence leaves at 9:30 a. m. and 2:30 p. m., returning at 1:30 and 10:00 p. m. But this is not all. The entire round trip—forty-five miles—is offered to the public for 25 cents. Think of it! No more liberal offer has ever been made to people who are looking for recreation and pleasure, with comfort and even luxury. This price for the round trip ticket has been made by the management in order to give every man, woman and child a chance for a brief respite from the oppressive, fiery heat that rises from brick walls and asphalt pavements during the dog days.

On the trip and at the park the company furnishes high-class music, and dancing is the order of the day. And then comes Montesano Park itself; it is not a beer garden or a resort for undesirable characters; it is simply a beautiful summer resort, shaded by large trees, cooled by many fountains and ornamented by a labyrinth of white gravel paths on a background of glossy green. The Columbia Excursion Co. has carried 12,000,000 passengers without a single accident. It is an ideal place to go and take one's family for a day's outing.

St. Rose's Church Picnic.

St. Rose's Church will give an outing at Lake Ramona on the Suburban Electric Railroad July 29. There will be excellent music and dancing, rowing on the lake, various athletic games and bicycle races. In the evening a magnificent display of fireworks will be given. The proceeds will be devoted to furnishing St. Rose's new [illegible] at Goodfellow and Etzel avenues.

HOW POPULIST LEADERS STAND.

THE MOST PROMINENT ARE ROOTING FOR BRYAN.

TAUBENECK ALMOST ALONE.

Stewart, Lewellyn and Others Really Big Men Are for Indorsing the Democratic Ticket.

The summing up of the situation in the Populist camp on the eve of battle may be tersely put.

There are only two propositions which will be considered in the convention which will meet next Wednesday.

One is that the People's Party shall indorse Mr. Bryan and the Chicago platform outright.

The other is that the convention shall nominate Mr. Bryan as its candidate for the Presidency and adopt a platform of its own, with possibly a Populist for Vice-President in the place of Mr. Sewall, the Democratic nominee.

While the "middle of the road" faction is still trying to bolster up the movement to nominate an independent ticket on a straight Populist platform, it meets with no approval, save from the Southern States. There the Populist votes are not needed to insure the election of a free silver candidate.

In the Western and Northwestern States, where the Populist votes are needed to insure victory for the free silver Presidential candidate in the electoral college, the sentiment is nearly unanimous for an indorsement of Bryan.

The proposition that the national Democracy shall promise the Populists to join with them in a concerted movement to send to Congress only free silver men, whether they be Democrats or Populists, is well received.

That is a secondary consideration, however, which all the leaders claim can be disposed of after the main issue of combining all their forces to insure the election of William J. Bryan.

Caucuses and conferences in number were held by the anti-Bryan wing yesterday. When the day's work was over little progress had been made in the attempt to prevent either the indorsement or nomination of Bryan.

One or the other is sure to result.

The general trend is for an indorsement.

As they line up for next week's battle nearly every prominent free silver Populist in the party is for Bryan.

Three prominent arrivals last night were Senator William M. Stewart of Nevada, Senator William A. Peffer and ex-Gov. Lewellyn of Kansas.

They are all for Bryan and opposed to any "middle of the road" plan.

"We must indorse or nominate Bryan," said Senator Stewart.

"There is nothing else for us to do. If we are ever going to get together, now is the time. If we cannot coalesce now, we can never join forces and the victory that is in sight may be delayed for years."

"What effect will the attitude of the Southern Populists who are against an indorsement of Mr. Bryan have?"

"None at all. They will put themselves in a very foolish position. If the convention should nominate an independent ticket, the rank and file of the party would not support it."

"Could the Populists maintain their organization with a Presidential candidate other than Mr. Bryan?"

"No. It would waste itself. We must have all our forces united for free silver. That is what the people demand and that is what they must have."

Senator Stewart said further that he would be joined here by Senator Jones of Nevada.

It was also possible that Senator Teller would come to take part in the movement for Bryan if it should be deemed necessary.

The other silver Republican Senators who walked out of the St. Louis Republican Convention because they could not support the gold standard platform, will be here today.

They are for Bryan.

Ex-Gov. Lewellyn of Kansas, one of the foremost Populists in the Sunflower State, and Senator Peffer of Topeka came in last night.

Both are for Bryan and will devote their best energies to securing an indorsement of the Chicago nominees at the convention next Wednesday.

Senator Peffer said: "I think the first thing the convention should do is to readopt the Omaha platform, revised and brought up to date, and appoint a national executive committee to look after party affairs so as to preserve our party identity. There is no reason why we should abandon our doctrine or party.

"In the next place, I think we ought to arrange some satisfactory way to combine the anti-gold vote of the country.

"That can be done in different States to accord with the voting strength of the several parties, and after the election, if we have chosen a majority of the electors, they could select among themselves, according to their preferences, a candidate.

"That would allow all of us to vote according to our party preferences, and it would relieve the situation of any causes of friction thereafter.

"There are only two points upon which I feel tenacious. The first is to maintain our party organization and the second is to combine the silver vote of the country."

Ex-Gov. Lewellyn is plain spoken on the issue.

"It seems to me," he said, "that we must indorse Bryan. The Chicago platform is quite as strong as the resolutions adopted by the State Convention in Hutchinson, Kan., last March.

"In many respects it goes even further in its demand for relief for the people.

"The silver plank is all right; the right of trial by jury is demanded; opposition to the issue of bonds by the Government is strong and ringing.

"There seems to be a fear that if the Populists indorse Bryan the party might be absorbed. No one need worry about that.

"I cannot understand why Mr. Taubeneck cannot take the view now that fusion or union is desirable."

The significance of Gov. Lewellyn's statement is better understood when it is stated that Chairman Taubeneck and Sergeant-at-Arms McDowell of the Populists National Committee went out to Kansas to attend the Hutchinson Convention.

At that time Chairman Taubeneck, who is now so bitterly opposed to Bryan, was in favor of fusion of all the silver men.

He practically wrote the Hutchinson platform and made it milder than it would have been otherwise, so that it might not create friction or arouse opposition to his plan of fusing with the Democrats.

Since then he has experienced a change of heart, and is now the most active Populist against any fusion with the Democrats.

When the Populists begin their deliberations Wednesday here is the way the leaders will toe the mark:

For Bryan and against an independent ticket, Senator Stewart and Senator Jones of Nevada; Senator Allen and Gov. Holcomb of Nebraska; Senator Peffer, ex-Congressman Jerry Simpson, ex-Gov. Lewellyn and ex-Congressman Harris of Kansas; Gen. J. B. Weaver of Iowa; Ignatius Donnelly of Minnesota; M. C. Rankin of Indiana; National Executive Committeeman McParlin, backed by his delegation from New York; National Secretary J. H. Turner of Washington City; National Committeeman Strickler of Nebraska; Fred Bailey of Oklahoma, and the rank and file of the party.

Against Mr. Bryan: Senator Butler of North Carolina, who has fat to fry in the Republican camp.

"Cyclone" Davis of Texas, who is never so well pleased as when he is talking through his hat which is 3 feet from tip to tip.

National Chairman Taubeneck, who has a job and is afraid he may lose it.

Sergeant-at-Arms McDowell, likewise holder of a sinecure in the National Committee.

Ex-Congressman Tom Watson of Georgia, who is wondering "where he is at."

A number of Southern Populists who cannot leave the "middle of the road" because they have fallen into a rut.

The Chicago Populist Bryan headquarters at the Lindell were additionally embellished yesterday by a handsome portrait of William J. Bryan, the Democratic candidate for President.

To-day's arrivals will be numerous. There will be various caucuses, but not until Monday will the contest open in earnest.

Many of the delegations will postpone their coming until Tuesday, but most of the States will be represented by Monday.

Chairman Taubeneck said last night that there would be regularly elected delegates from all the States and Territories except Alaska.

A BEAUTIFUL SIGHT

Will Music Hall Present to the National Silver Delegates.

Grand Music Hall in the Exposition Building, where the National Silver Convention will be held this week, will afford a beautiful sight indeed when the decorators shall have finished their work.

In the vestibule will be painted an American eagle of mammoth proportions, in the usual defiant attitude, underneath a canopy of blue.

In its talons will be held three American flags and a streamer bearing the words, "E Pluribus Unum," the motto of the United States.

The interior of the hall will be bright with flags and bunting. Each of the sixteen iron columns will be adorned with the national colors in the shape of a shield, while the balcony railing will be hung with the pictures of the ex-Presidents of the United States against a background of red, white and blue.

From the private boxes, ten in number, will be hung banners in the national colors, two banners to each box, and every banner adorned with a gold and silver star, to symbolize bimetallism.

The stage, however, will be the piece de resistance. Midway its length and directly over the chairman's seat, a circular piece twelve feet in diameter will be suspended, showing the gigantic eagle holding in one talon a silver dollar two feet in diameter, while the other talon is poised on the national coat of arms. The blue canopy about the bird is dotted with stars, forty-five in number and alternately gold and silver. A branch of laurel gives a touch of freshness to the picture.

The background of the stage will represent the entrance to a palace, with three arched doors, each gayly festooned with stars and stripes. The side scenes will represent the Capitol at Washington on the one hand and the White House on the other. These pieces are thirty feet long and twelve feet high and make a realistic and appropriate picture.

Altogether the decorations are neatly planned and cleverly executed.

BIG DIAMOND ROBBERY.

Hattie Smith's Colored Servant Looted the House in Hattie's Absence.

Alexander L. Freman, colored, conducting a barber shop at 1919 Market street, and Mamie Coleman, his colored mistress, were arrested yesterday afternoon, accused of stealing and disposing of nearly $1,000 worth of diamond jewelry. The woman admits stealing it and the man confesses to pawning it.

A pair of diamond earrings, valued at $500, was recovered in a pawnshop where $200 had been borrowed on them by Freman.

The jewelry was stolen from the dressing case in Hattie Smith's room in the house at 1227 St. Charles street last Thursday.

Mamie Coleman had been employed as a servant in the house, conducted by Hattie Smith, and Thursday noon the proprietress left the place, locking her jewelry box and securing the door to her room.

While she was away the colored servant found the keys she had concealed under a hat rack in the hall and entered the closed room. After unlocking the jewelry case, she removed from the box a pair of earrings, two finger rings and a breastpin, all set in diamonds.

She took them to her lover at the barber shop, and he pawned them for what he could get.

On the earrings he secured $300 and on the other stuff $150, but he could not remember where he had deposited the finger rings and the breastpin.

When the colored woman was first arrested she protested and asserted her innocence. Chief of Detectives Desmond "sweated" her for four hours yesterday, and finally got her to confess and implicate her lover.

MRS. CRANE'S WILL PROBATED.

Cut Off Her Daughter With $5 and Gave $50,000 to New York.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Angelina Crane's will, which bequeathed $50,000 to the city of New York for the erection of a drinking fountain and $5 to her only child, Edith H. Simmons, was admitted to probate by Surrogate Arnold, in spite of objections as to its validity. Mrs. Crane's estate was valued at $70,000. She bequeathed $20,000 to charitable institutions, the nominal amount mentioned to her daughter and the residue to the city. The will was opposed not on the ground of mental incapacity, but on the ground that the city had no power to accept charitable bequests. It was also alleged that it was void on account of indefiniteness and uncertainty, and because it assumed to dispose of more than half the estate to charitable uses, and because it was unnatural in cutting off the daughter from a share in the estate.

The Surrogate in his decision admitting the will to probate said that Mrs. Crane had given a reason for her course that was to her own mind a sufficient justification. Nothing in the statutes, he said, prevented the acceptance of the money by the city. It was one of the corporate duties of the city to provide for the preservation of public health, and for that purpose an abundant supply of water and facilities for its use were necessary. The fulfillment of the requirements of the bequest properly pertained to the functions of the corporation.

REV. KNAPP'S SUCCESSOR.

Mr. Beard Has Gone to Bitlis to Take His Place.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—Minister Terrell to-day telegraphed Secretary Olney that in accordance with his understanding with the Sultan that when a missionary left another should take his place, Mr. Beard has gone to Bitlis to replace Dr. Knapp, who was ordered to Constantinople for trial upon a charge of encouraging rebellion. United States Consul Bergholtz is at Erzeroum, with partial recognition by the Government. The Sultan declares the report that he ever ordered the expulsion of American missionaries to be false.

Hendrix College and Guarantors Sued.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., July 18.—Attorneys Blackwood and Williams to-day brought suit in the Pulaski Circuit Court in favor of the Union Guaranty and Trust Co. against Hendrix College and P. D. English, A. S. McKennon, George W. Hill, F. S. H. Johnston, V. V. Harlan, J. H. Riggin, Thomas H. Ware, E. N. Evans, J. W. Brown, W. W. Martin, A. L. Malone, M. M. Smith, A. M. R. Branson and James T. Henderson, guarantors of the principal and interest upon certain paper, which forms the basis of the suit.

The complaint sets forth that on December 5, 1893, the plaintiff loaned Hendrix College $9,000, evidenced by three promissory notes of $3,000 each, bearing 10 per cent interest until paid, wherefore plaintiff prays judgment. It is understood that strenuous efforts will be made to meet the obligation.

MAUD AND HER GARDEN PARTY.

DIFFERENT, INDEED, FROM THE TENNYSONIAN THEME.

WAS A BRILLIANT FUNCTION.

Wales Wore a White Stovepipe Hat and Actress Keeley Held a Levee on the Lawn.

LONDON, July 17.—Not for a long time has London known a week so full of events of marked social importance as the one which closes to-day. To begin with, there was on Monday the garden party at Buckingham Palace, given by the Prince and Princess of Wales in honor of their daughter, Princess Maud, who will, on Wednesday next become the bride of Prince Charles of Denmark. According to authorities in such matters, this party was the most brilliant social function that has taken place in the United Kingdom since the jubilee year.

The United States Ambassador, Mr. Thomas F. Bayard, was beset by those of his fellow-countrymen and women, who, being in London at that time, craved an opportunity to mingle with titled folk. The regular court was reinforced for this occasion by foreign Princes, envoys and field marshals, high officers of the army and navy and other notabilities, and these leavened a rare lot of lesser folk, such as Tim Healy, the noted Irish member of Parliament; W. E. H. Lacky, the historian; Ellen Terry and Sir Henry Irving. Mrs. Keeley, the nonogenarian actress, was also there, having been especially invited by the Queen, and held a levee on the lawn.

Particularly picturesque were the queen's watermen, wearing scarlet hoods, doublets and hose, the letters, "V. R." formed of the shamrock, rose and thistle, in gilt, on their breasts. These acted as ferrymen, carrying in their wherries many idling guests upon the lake. The Prince of Wales, contrary to the attempted dictation of fashion, wore a white stovepipe hat, with a black band, and two of his suit had their heads similarly attired.

So far as the Queen is concerned, the wedding will be as private as possible, Her Majesty being expected to arrive in the city on Monday evening. On Tuesday she will, in private, invest Crown Prince Frederick of Denmark with the Order of the Garter and with the first-class decoration of the Victoria and Albert Cross. Upon both of his sons, Prince Christian and Prince Charles, the Grand Cross of the Bath will be conferred at the same time. The Queen will not attend the wedding breakfast. On Thursday, the day after the wedding, she will return to Windsor, whence she intends to go soon to the Isle of Wight.

It has been semi-officially announced that the royal family would not be displeased if people should decorate their houses in honor of the wedding and doubtless a great many will take the hint.

Among the presents which have been received by Princess Maud is a magnificent solitaire diamond from Mr. Wm Waldorf Astor.

In connection with the approaching wedding, a curious phase of British philanthrophy has developed in the Chronicle, which recently urged the Princess Maud not to sanction cruelty by wearing osprey plumes on her hat. In response, the Chronicle received an intimation from the princess to the effect that she would not wear osprey plumes, and upon this the Chronicle published an article in praise of her, commender her for her kindness of heart.

However, it was observed that at the Royal Garden Party at Buckingham Palace on Monday most of the feminine members of the Royal family were decorated with osprey plumes. In sore amazement the Chronicle noted the fact and appealed to the Queen to forbid the use of osprey plumes by members of the royal family.

Curious side lights are being thrown upon the licensing laws by the testimony before the Royal Commission. Hon. Algernon Bourke, manager of White's Club, Willis Rooms, stated that if the closing hours designated in the laws should be enforced, club life would be destroyed and members obliged to do as men of similar means do in the United States, that is, live in hotels. He said there had been a great decrease in drinking at the West End Clubs in the last twenty years.

Sir Donald Smith, K. C. M., has, during the week, been interesting himself with a large number of scientists, in promoting a project to prepare a complete catalogue of scientific literature.

The Authors' Club banquet on Thursday evening was attended by Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett and many other literary celebrities, including Miss Jeanette Gilder, Miss Blanche Howard and Mr. Hepworth Dixon.

Mr. Harry Higgins, who has been spoken of as a possible lessee of the Covent Garden, was formerly a life guardsman. His mother was one of the seven Misses Tichborn, and his first wife was Lady Hilde Finch Hatton. The present Mrs. Higgins is an American.

The American Line steamer New York, which sails from Southampton to-day, takes as passengers Robert J. Cook, the famous Yale coach, and Messrs. Simpson, Langford and Lonacre of the Yale-Henley crew. The Yale men have been having a glorious time in England. They were feted on all sides and had invitations to many select entertainments. Mr. Cook, especially, received marked attention from those standing highest in the ranks of English sportsmen, and has been entertained at exclusive clubs, etc.

One of the most interesting dramatic revivals of recent years will be seen next September, when Sir Henry Irving will produce "Cymballina" at the Lyceum Theater. Sir Henry regains possession of the Lyceum on July 25, when Forbes Robinson's tenancy expires.

Eric McKay is not at all pleased with the announcement that M. Sardou has received a commission from Sir Henry Irving to prepare a play for the Lyceum dealing with the French revolution, and having Robespierre for its central figure. Mr. McKay has been building a drama on precisely the same theme during the past year.

Another theater is to be added to the increasing list of London suburban playhouses. The plans and site of a big house to be erected in Fulham, one of the most populous districts of Greater London, have been approved by the London County Council, and building operations will be begun at once. The auditorium will have a seating capacity of 2,500. The lessee and manager is A. F. Henderson, late of the Vaudeville.

MONROE DOCTRINE RECOGNIZED.

INTERPRETATION PUT UPON SALISBURY'S STATEMENT.

OUTLOOK FOR ARBITRATION.

"We Have Been Rather Glad to Negotiate With the United States Than With Venezuela."

Special to The Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, July 18.—A special cable dispatch to the Post to-night from London says:

Lord Salisbury took every one by surprise yesterday in making his statement in the House of Lords on the Venezuelan and arbitration questions. Routine business only being expected, few people were present. Lord Rosebery only arrived to hear the latter part of the speech, hence the absence of debate. Lord Rosebery certainly would have wished to express the earnest Liberal desire to treat the whole Anglo-American question as one above party wranglings, and to encourage the closing of the Venezuelan dispute and the erection of a permanent court of arbitration.

The correspondence provokes surprise that the Venezuelan dispute is no nearer a settlement by arbitration. Lord Salisbury clearly expects that the exhaustive inquiry now being made at Washington and here into the past history of Venzuela, Spain and Holland in South America will easily satisfy even the United States that England's case is so unanswerable that diplomacy will easily settle the dispute without arbitration.

Meanwhile it is noted with interest that Lord Salisbury, instead of resenting the interference of the United States, as formerly, now says: "We have been rather glad to negotiate with the United States than with Venezuela."

This practically recognizes the Monroe doctrine. It is a strong indication of the general British sentiment that Lord Salisbury has resisted the imperialistic influences operating in another direction and carried the question of a permanent court of arbitration so far. Public opinion, to which he appeals, will reply that the benefit of Anglo-American peace is so enormous to the whole human race that we should risk something for the experiment. The question is whether we should risk so much as would be involved by making arbitration universal and final. One of the main obstacles in the past has been the constant Canadian belief that in Anglo-American arbitrations Canadian interests have suffered, as in the instance of the Maine-Oregon boundary disputes and in the fact that the Behring Sea award is still unpaid. The change of ministry in Canada is, however, important as tending to modify Canadian aspiration.

DIDN'T MAKE UP.

Mrs. Mary E. Taylor Says She'll No More of Joey.

Mrs. Mary E. Taylor of 3708 La Salle street is pretty and plump and has soft hazel eyes and is worried about a divorce suit brought by her husband, Joseph Z. Taylor. She is also indignant because of a report that the cross-bill she filed in answer to her husband's charges had been dismissed.

"Why, the paper said we kissed and made up," said buxom Mrs. Taylor. "That's scandalous. I never will make up with him after the way he treated me. I crossed him because he tried to get my baby and I'm going to fight the case till I am plumb tired of him."

Exports and Imports.

NEW YORK, July 18.—The exports of specie from the port of New York for the week amounted to $3,341,978 in gold and $1,096,850 in silver. The imports were: Gold, $17,175; silver, $19,573; dry goods, $2,198,706; general merchandise, $5,613,137.

TO RATIFY THE CHICAGO TICKET.

ST. LOUIS DEMOCRACY ARRANGING FOR A BIG RALLY.

LIST OF EMINENT SPEAKERS.

The City Central Committee, Aided by Democratic Clubs, Will Honor Bryan and Sewall.

The committee appointed by the central body of the St. Louis Democracy to arrange for a grand Bryan and Sewall ratification meeting, met Saturday afternoon at the office of Justice Spalding.

The City Central Democratic Committee, members of the Jefferson Club and a large number of prominent citizens, friends of silver and Democracy, were present by invitation and participated in the proceeding.

Judge Frank M. Estes officiated as chairman and Sterling Bond as Secretary. The proceedings throughout were characterized by the utmost enthusiasm.

Stirring addresses were made by Judge Estes, Col. Chas. H. Jones, H. A. Blossom, Police Commissioner John A. Lee, Judge Jno. M. Wood, H. A. Guinsburg and Wm. Logan, all of whom were applauded to the echo.

The date fixed for the ratification meeting is Saturday, July 25, at 8 p. m., and Grand Music Hall is the place selected for what promises to be a remarkable demonstration.

Arrangements will also be made for overflow meetings if, as anticipated, Music Hall will not hold the gatherings of Democracy's clans.

The chair was authorized to invite the following well-known orators to address the meeting: Hon. R. P. Bland, Senators Vest, Cockrell and Jones; Gov. Altgeld of Illinois; Obermeyer of Kansas, and our own Wm. J. Stone; Buck Hinrichsen, C. K. Ladd and J. R. Williams of Illinois; ex-Senator Martin of Kansas; Col. Chas. H. Jones and gubernatorial candidates Waddill, Stephens, Ball and Hockaday.

The chair was also authorized to write such other speakers as seemed to him advisable.

John A. Lee, H. A. Guinsburg and Howard Blossom were appointed a Committee on Music, Decorations and Finance.

John A. Lee, speaking on behalf of the Bland Club, said that the organization would turn out in uniform 1,500 strong.

Central Committeeman Boland said the Seventeenth Ward Bryan Club would turn out in force.

Committeeman Tucker of Carondelet pledged the Thirteenth Ward Silver Club for at least 100 men.

Committeeman Dolan of the Twenty-seventh Ward come forward with a similar pledge.

Committeeman Conran declared that the First Ward would be right in the head set with 200 stalwart silver men.

Constable Brady of the Second Ward duplicated the announcement for his bailiwick.

J. W. Falk, a member of the House Committee of the Jefferson Club, promised a good representation from that organization.

And so it went. All present gave assurances of creditable turnouts from their respective wards.

When it is considered that this is but a preliminary meeting, and necessarily limited in attendance, it needs no prophetic eye to foretell that the Bryan and Sewall ratification meeting next Saturday night will be a record breaker.

Samuel Ehrlich Applies for a Divorce and Gives Reasons.

Samuel Ehrlich sued yesterday for a divorce from Ella Ehrlich. They were married Dec. 10, [illegible]. The plaintiff alleges that on June 17, 1896, he returned home and found a note left by the defendant.

It said: "I have taken the household effects and left you. You need not try to find me for I have gone to remain apart from you in the future."

HOW TO CARE FOR THE BICYCLE.

E. L. MORGAN GIVES RIDERS SOME VALUABLE HINTS ABOUT CLEANING.

Keeping a bicycle in proper repair and condition is one of the things which gives a new rider a great deal of trouble.

Most of them buy a bicycle and remain in total ignorance of how to keep it clean and in order. They do not know that it is as necessary to be able to clean a bicycle expeditiously and thoroughly as to know how to ride it. They do not know what to do with a bicycle except to stand it up against the wall.

Yet a bicycle, from the very nature of its delicate and intricate construction, and the wear and tear to which it is subjected, requires more care than any other piece of machinery.

I am not a believer in too much cleaning, that is, I do not believe that every rider should incessantly clean his bearings, cones, etc. Neither should he be over anxious to remove every little spot or speck of dust or mud that may appear on it.

But I believe a wheel should be cleaned whenever dirty from a day's use. And to clean it in the proper way means a whole lot in the life of the machine.

The rider who takes good care of his wheel is always more than repaid for his trouble. A well cared for wheel is really better at the end of the season than it was when quite new. That is, providing the machine was a first-class one.

The first and perhaps most important rule of wheel-caring is that the machine should be kept in a dry place. Dampness should never be given a chance to get at it, because it results in the formation of rust, something very injurious to the parts and hard to get rid of. Then the bearings work easier when the wheel is kept in a dry place. If two wheels of the same make are placed, one in a dry and the other in a damp place, the difference in appearance and running qualities will be very noticeable in a short time.

Only soft cloths should be used to clean the wheel. They should be used only with just enough oil to make its presence felt and not enough to be left when the wheel has been cleaned.

In taking off dust or mud use an oiled rag. If you are in a hurry don't mind if a little dust or dirt remains. If very muddy, water may be freely used, but care must be taken that it does not get into the bearings, and the wheel should be immediately wiped dry.

The chain and sprockets should be objects of a great deal of attention; they are vital parts of the wheel. Dust, dirt and small gravel very often accumulate on the chain, and as it causes considerable friction and cutting, it should be removed as soon and as thoroughly as possible.

The best and most expeditious manner in which to clean the chain is to soak it in gasoline. Gasoline is a thorough cleanser, does not hurt, is inoffensive and dries rapidly. It will remove dirt, grease and every other kind of accumulation at once.

The chain should be steeped in the liquid, which should be deep enough to cover it. Cover the vessel to prevent evaporation, and let the chain soak. When it has remained there about ten minutes remove it and rinse in clean gasoline. The dirty liquid can be allowed to settle, and when the dirt has gone to the bottom it can be bottled for future use. When the chain is dry it should be lubricated with bicycle oil.

The oil should be allowed to run through the interstices of the links. One drop should be used at each connection. I don't like soap, vaseline or tallow as a chain lubricant. Graphite should be used only as a surface lubricant between the chain and the sprocket.

Be careful when using oil about the wheel that any of it does not reach the rubber tires. Oil is ruinous to rubber tires. It rots them. If by chance any of it gets on the tires rub it off at once or better scrape it off with a knife.

Speaking of tires, do not let your bicycle stand in the sun, because the sun hurts the rubber. Of course you can't help letting the sun shine on them when you are riding, but when you let your wheel stand see that it gets its rest in a cool, shady place. If the rubber is wet so much the better.

Sprockets are not hard to clean. An oiled rag will do all that is necessary. Neither do they need such frequent cleansing as the chain, which should be looked after once a week at least, and particularly after having been ridden over heavy, wet, gravel or macadam roads.

The bearings require a whole lot of care but their setting is so delicate and intricate that very few riders are capable of properly removing or adjusting them. They are always nearly dust and waterproof in high grade machines and do not need attention so frequently as the chain and sprocket, which are exposed. So your bearings will probably run an entire season without causing you any trouble. When they do I would advise an immediate calling in of the services of a good repair shop, as it takes a skilled and experienced mechanic to properly remove, cleanse, repair and adjust bearings.

When we come down to using gear cases as we surely will before another year has passed over us the cyclist will have little trouble to keep his machine clean. It will be only a matter of keeping the tubing free from dust and dirt.

To clean the nickeled parts a thousand preparations are sold. The best is polishine. It should be applied with a soft rag, left to dry and then polished briskly.

In conclusion, I would say use vaseline freely on nickeled parts in damp weather, or if the wheel is to be left unused for any length of time. Before making a trip, tighten every nut. The extra trouble is but little and you need have but little fear of stripped threads on axles and turning handle bars.

PAUL DURBARROW.

CENTURY ROAD CLUB.

The club will go to Cliff Cave to-day, where their first annual picnic will be held, and as nearly all the members have signified their intention of going, an unusually large crowd is expected.

The run last Sunday to Fenton was well attended, there being 80 men on the run.

Harry Coke, J. B. Green and Jessie Bader made a century, starting at 4:30 a. m. and going to the county line and back to the club-house, then out to Fenton. Time, 11 hours.

W. S. Pierce and Harry Cochran started from the club-house at 6 a. m. on a century, and finished at 3:05 p. m. Time, 9 hours and 5 minutes. This was Mr. Pierce's first century, and he found it so easy that he, in company with Harry Cochran, will attempt to lower the Missouri State 100-mile road record, now held by Mr. Ross Miller.

Weather permitting, the attempt will be made to-day, the route selected is as follows: Club-house to county line, back to Clayton, then out to Bonhomme, and return to the club.

Mr. Jesse Bader, in company with another wheelman, left Thursday morning for a trip of two weeks in the heart of the Ozark Mountains.

Mr. J. B. Green is contemplating a wheel trip from St. Louis to Philadelphia, which he intends making some time during the next month.

The club will be represented at the Louisville meet by at least 20 members, several of whom will stay the entire week.

Mr. Harry Coke, who had an Eagle wheel stolen from the club last week, has as yet no clue.

Mr. George Easton, after his long inactivity has again resumed his old habit of running up mileage, and if Rodgers does not look out, his present 3,600 will be eclipsed, as of late Mr. Easton has been making such trips as the county line, Bonhomme, De Soto and similar other long trips during the week.

Mr. Ernest Wills has given up the mileage fight, and has taken off his cyclometer.

ST. LOUIS CYCLING CLUB.

Eighteen men made the trip to Morse's Mills last Sunday, returning to Honig's spring for dinner.

W. J. Cox, Alex Fox, Fred Jones, Bob Laing, Brush Herman and Spengler went out to Ballwin Saturday night, and from there to Valley Park for dinner on Sunday.

Wm. Roseborough, Lewis, George Graf and E. L. Morgan went to Clayton for dinner, and Hilltown in the afternoon.

Gus Loeffel and Bud Weaver will ride to Van Buren, Ark., this month, and will endeavor to make the trip in one day. The distance is 160 miles. The first part of the trip will be over the De Soto road. If accomplished it will be a good test for rider, wheel and tire.

The club has decided to purchase a trophy with the $200 won from the Century Road Club in the late road race. By so doing the club has placed the riders in a safe position, so they may have no fear of Gideon's wrath.

Prest. Wolzendorf has not returned from his trip to Washington, D. C. He is expected home about July 25.

W. B. Hood is making arrangements to leave for a trip awheel across the plains to 'Frisco. His trip will be solely for pleasure.

Bert Harding, Alex Laing, Speck, Stade, Menzie, Orr, Cox, White, Weidner, Joe Howard and Tivy are in active training at the Pastime track. All are in good shape.

CROSS COUNTRY CYCLERS.

About half of the club turned out early last Sunday and had a pleasant time at breakfast, which was served at Falk's. Owing to the heat and dusty condition of the road the boys would not go out any further than Busch's Grove.

Three applications for membership have been received and will be acted on at a special meeting to be held sometime next week.

The run for Sunday, July 19, will be to Meramec Highlands, leaving the club at 8 a. m. and returning by noon.

There has been quite a little talk about a three-cornered road race between the Stags, the Rovers and the Cross Country Cyclers. As they have received no official notice from the other clubs, they have not considered the matter, but are willing to talk "business" whenever the other clubs are ready.

TO-DAY'S CLUB RUNS.

South Side Cycle Club to Valley Park via Manchester road. Start 8:30 a. m. sharp.

Cross Country Cycle Club to Meramec Highlands via Manchester road. Start 8:30 a. m.

Kenneth Cycle Club to Belleville, via bridge, starting at 8 a. m.

Southwest Cycle Club to Mascoutah, via Belleville, starting at 8 a. m.

Century Road Club to Indian Cave, via Telegraph road, starting 8 a. m.

Mercury Wheel Club to Creve Coeur Lake, via Olive street road, starting at 8:30 a. m.

Rover Cycle Club to Ballwin, via Manchester road, starting at 8:30 a. m.

Stag Bicycle Club to Fenton, via Gravois road, starting at 9 a. m.

MERCURY WHEEL CLUB.

The name of Mr. D. A. Chewning has been proposed for membership.

Dave Punch and Charley Knower have been appointed clerks of course for the next meet, on July 25.

Yesterday afternoon the members left the city to spend the evening and enjoy a night's rest in the cooling country atmosphere of Bonhomme. They will return Sunday, stopping at Ballwin for dinner.

The triangular race between Woods, Engleman and Littmann was marked by a series of accidents and punctures from start to finish. For this reason the judges were unable to decide who should stand the treat. Consequently each has agreed to pay the pro rata expense of the club smoker, which otherwise was to have been paid by the loser.

A run to Creve Coeur has been scheduled for the 26th, and the regular monthly meeting will take place on the last Friday of the month.

RIVERSIDE WHEELMEN.

The club will run to Belleville to-morrow, starting from the club-house at 8:30 a. m. and from Eads Bridge at 9.

Vice-President Otto Wall, Jr., will leave next Tuesday for a two months' trip through Old Mexico. His club mates and friends wish him a safe and pleasant journey.

If the fast brigade can be induced to train, the Riversides will be well represented at the Pastime track next Saturday.

Prof. Herman Fabricius has developed a mania for playing lawn tennis. If he can hold his own playing tennis as well as he can ride, his opponents will know he is in the game.

The Riversides would like it known that they were the first cycle club to adopt a crimson fleur de lis as their emblem. The other organization that has adopted the same emblem should take notice of this.

The club will give a reception the latter part of the month, to celebrate their first birthday, and show the public their handsome new quarters.

CONCERNING BEARINGS.

One of the most essential things to a good wheel is good and perfectly adjusted bearings, and to have these several things are necessary. First, it must be seen that the bearing is perfectly adjusted. Second, they must be well oiled with some lubricant that will not gum; vaseline is good. Third, the rider should be certain that the bearing is free from sand or broken balls, as they are very harmful to cones. If your cone or cone cup becomes unevenly worn replace it with a new one as soon as possible. Be sure that the bearing is left loose enough to turn easily, until a new one is obtained, as this will save the other part of the bearing and the balls. When a ball is broken, do not run your wheel the whole season without replacing it, as this is injurious to cones.

PAT O'CONNOR'S WIT.

Pat O'Connor, the rollicking lad who was Johnny Johnson's right hand man during all his record trials, has an unfailing fund of Irish wit. Last week at the training camp in Louisville the men were discussing Antipodean racing, and Bald and Sanger jokingly proposed to O'Connor that they spend the coming winter there. "I'll go wid yez, boys," said Pat, "an' whin we three gits over there we'll jist burn up their thracks for 'em. They sess as how all the Australian thracks be grass, but whin we gits through wid 'em they'll all be cinder paths, they will."

TO RIDE A MILE IN ONE MINUTE.

Evan E. Anderson the Professional Cyclist of This City Will Attempt to Do So on a Bicycle on August 9 Next.

On Sunday, August 9, 1896, Evan E. Anderson, the well-known professional bicycle racer of St. Louis, will endeavor to ride a mile in less than one minute, paced by a locomotive. The attempt will be made under the auspices of the Post-Dispatch on the track of the St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul railroad, near Granite City, Ill., and about ten miles distant from St. Louis. It will be the greatest trial of bicycle speed ever made in the world.

The track and engine have been secured, the railroad people are anxious and eager to have the trial take place. All that remains to be done is for Mr. Anderson to put up his money and sign his contract with the railroad. This he will do on Monday, July 20. Then he will at once start to get ready for his hazardous undertaking.

Master Mechanic Killen of the St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul railroad will see that he gets his engine. The roadmaster of the division will see to it that the road bed is put in proper condition. A portion of the track, two miles long, straight as an arrow and level as a plate of glass, has been selected for the trial. The space between the rails will be laid with smooth, well-planed hardwood, laid lengthwise and worked until it is as smooth as a confidence man. On this strip of board Anderson will ride in his terrific contest with old Father Time.

It will be two miles long. This will give the intrepid wheelman and his monstrous pacemaker half a mile in which to get up speed and another half mile in which to slow up. The intermediate mile will be traveled at the rate of sixty miles per hour. After prolonged calculation Anderson came to the conclusion that half a mile at each end would be quite enough for all the practical purposes of getting headway and slowing up. Actual trials will be made later on to prove the veracity or falseness of his calculations.

The engine behind which Anderson will attempt to break all records for human locomotion will probably be No. 7 of the St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul railroad. This locomotive has been specially built for speed, is quite new and of the most approved pattern. It possesses three driving wheels each six feet in height. The piston has an enormous stroke in a 22x24-inch cylinder. The locomotive is of unusual appearance, having two smokestacks instead of one, as is usually the case. This peculiarity of construction is the result of the desire to give the big machine the highest possible speed. The parts of the steam chest are so constructed that the steam exhausts very quickly and there is none of that "back pressure" against the piston head, which for years has been a deterrent to high speed of locomotives. The No. 7 is guaranteed to run at a rate of eighty miles and, although she never has been tried out to that extreme, she has repeatedly done her sixty miles an hour with a large train of passenger coaches. Mr. Killen says that there is no doubt whatever about her ability to go eighty miles an hour. With the tender attached this leviathan of the iron road weighs 80,000 pounds. What an almost infernal pacemaker such a machine will make! Just think of it. Forty tons of animated steel and iron roaring, groaning, tearing, howling and sweeping onward like a huge comet through thin air. And back of this monster a light, delicate, almost fragile machine of thin steel tubes, wire wove spokes, paper rims and air tires, ridden by a man. The machine altogether will not weigh as much as the lever with which the engineer sends life into the huge iron lungs, fiery heart and tremendous steel limbs of his monstrous servant. A hundred men could not budge the huge pacemaker from the tracks. An ordinarily strong man can, between his fingers, crumple and destroy the bicycle. All of which goes to show the wondrous power of the new agent of locomotion which has come among us.

It is because the aerial resistance, always offered to a cyclist going at a high rate of speed, must be overcome that Anderson wants the engine to plough a clear path for him through the retarding atmosphere. While "quads," "quints," "sextettes" and other machines have been made for pacemaking purposes, none of them have been quite able to go a mile in sixty seconds flat. However, with their imperfect properties, they have paced miles in 1:42 and 1:39 on a circular track. At that they do not afford the protection from aerial resistance an engine properly equipped, as the No. 7 will be, does.

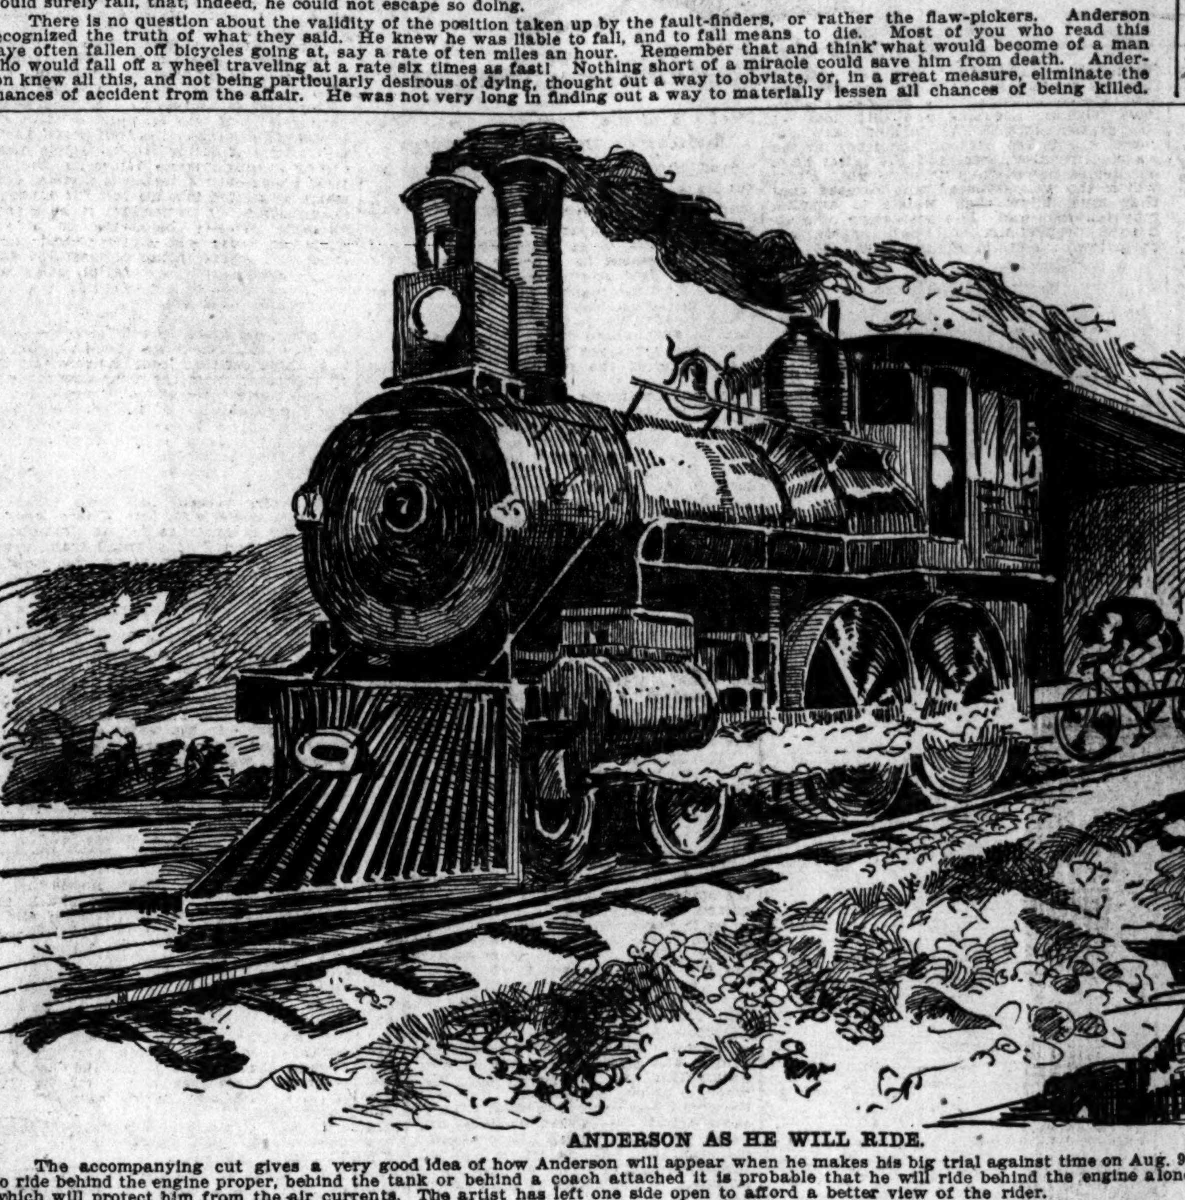
In order to do altogether away with aerial resistance, Mr. Anderson proposes to board up the back of his engine from the top of the tank to within half an inch of the rail. The boards will also extend several feet beyond the sides of the tank. This arrangement, he says, will give him a perfect shield against air resistance. Not only that. The speed at which the engine will cut through the air will form a kind of vacuumback of the boarded end, and Anderson will ride as if he was in a chamber from which all air had been exhausted.

Right here comes the main and most convincing part of his argument that he will succeed. He points out that several men have ridden a mile on a bicycle placed on a "home trainer" in less than fifty seconds. One man rode a mile on the trainer in :46½ seconds. This shows that a rider can pedal plenty fast and strong enough to make a mile in sixty seconds if he can only do away with the air resistance. For the benefit of the uninitiated in the mysteries of the bicycle it might be said that a "home trainer" is simply an arrangement of pulleys on which the wheels of a bicycle can be placed. Then the rider mounts and pedals away. The bicycle wheels revolve just as if on the road, but the machine does not advance. The resistance offered by the friction of the pulleys and wheels is about the same as that offered by a smooth road. The air resistance is, of course, not present. That is why any man who can pedal fast can ride a mile on a home trainer in less than one minute.

By his wall of boards Anderson does away with the racing cyclist's most relentless and most powerful foe. At the same time he clinches his argument that he can make the time. Nobody can doubt his entire ability to ride a mile in sixty seconds paced by a locomotive if—if—well—if he does not fall.

If he does not fall. Aye, there's the rub, as the buffalo said to the porcupine skin nailed to a friendly telegraph pole. After Anderson had convinced all the doubting Thomases as to his ability to do the trick, they admitted it, but pointed out that he would surely fall, that, indeed, he could not escape so doing.

There is no question about the validity of the position taken up by the fault-finders, or rather the flaw-pickers. Anderson recognized the truth of what they said. He knew he was liable to fall, and to fall means to die. Most of you who read this have often fallen off bicycles going at, say a rate of ten miles an hour. Remember that and think what would become of a man who would fall off a wheel traveling at a rate six times as fast! Nothing short of a miracle could save him from death. Anderson knew all this, and not being particularly desirous of dying, thought out a way to obviate, or, in a great measure, eliminate the chances of accident from the affair. He was not very long in finding out a way to materially lessen all chances of being killed.



ANDERSON AS HE WILL RIDE.

The accompanying cut gives a very good idea of how Anderson will appear when he makes his big trial against time on Aug. 9. While he has not yet decided whether to ride behind the engine proper, behind the tank or behind a coach attached it is probable that he will ride behind the engine alone. The illustration shows the shield which will protect him from the air currents. The artist has left one side open to afford a better view of the rider.

Even the most persistent of the opposition admitted that he would not fall if he could keep his front wheel away from any obstruction on the track in the nature of rocks or pebbles, which might be cast up by the suction which always follows a fast rushing train. This question was easily disposed of by showing how the rear end of the train could be boarded so as to keep all such minor obstructions off the board path.

Then the doubters sprung their last and most powerful objection. "Why," they said, "your front wheel is bound to strike the rear end of the engine. You can't help it. Supposing the pace set is not even and you run into it. You cannot pass on one side or the other as you would a quad on the track when you overrun it. You will go plump into it. Supposing you drop back and that current of inrushing air hits you? Why, it will shoot you up against the rear end of the engine like a stone from a catapult. The moment you hit it you are gone. You will go up in the air and you will be dead before you come down. Or, supposing that engine loses her speed for an instant? There will be a rear end collision and the engine won't be hurt either."

Anderson listened calmly. Then he told then how he had figured all that out and that he was prepared for such occurrences. He explained his device to keep his front wheel from striking the engine.

It is nothing more than the attachment of a board, or, rather, shelf to the wooden shield at the rear of the engine. This board will stand out horizontally and will act as a fender to keep the front wheel of the bicycle from touching the rear end of the mighty pacemaker. If the bicycle comes on it will strike the head between the fork crown and the handle bar clamp. The wheel will run under it, as it will be deep enough to keep it from touching the end of the engine. Put a table of the right height and depth against the wall and try to run your front wheel up against the wall, and you will have practical demonstration of what Anderson's fender will do.

Of course, he recognizes that there is a great deal of danger attached to the attempt, but he feels confident that he will succeed. He knows that it will require considerable luck and skill to follow a strip of wood four feet six inches wide for a mile at the rate of sixty miles an hour. If he swerves or runs off the track, the consequences will be disastrous to him. The roar, whirr, noise and whirl of his pacemaker will try his nerve to the utmost. But he feels confident in his ability to keep his head and control his nerves under any circumstances. He is indeed a man of iron.

Anderson will commence training for his great fight with Time at once. The attempt will not be made without much cautious preparation. The track builders will commence work to-morrow, and by Saturday the track will be in shape to ride on. Then Anderson will make a couple of trial trips. He will follow his engine in about 2:20 on the first trip and will gradually come down to 1:25. Then will come the supreme trial. He will have a special machine built for him to ride. While it will not weigh more than the average wheel, it will be of proven material and strong in every point. Special attention will be given to the strength of the forks, steering head and wheels. The gear will probably be about 110 inches. As the air resistance will be nil, this gear will be as easy to push as a 72-inch under ordinary circumstances. Therefore his legs will not have to move faster than if he rode a mile in 2:20 on the track.

There is no doubt that he will ride the distance in the stipulated time if he can keep his front wheel straight. As for being "shaken" or outrun by the engine, such a contingency is almost impossible. The air current which sweeps after a fast moving train will be strong enough to keep him after the engine. Indeed, he could not stop if he wanted to. The current will keep him going. So, unless he falls, it is a plain case of "You can't lose me, Charley." Anderson himself says that he will get into the "vacuum" in rear of the engine and will ride as easily as if he was going to a picnic. He believes it will be just like sitting up on a home trainer in a drawing room.

Anderson will, if he carries out his programme, and everything indicates that he will, be the first man to ride after locomotive pacing. The idea, however, originated with Charles M. Murphy of Brooklyn, N. Y., a cyclist who gained notoriety by being suspended for complicity in crooked racing in this city last August. Murphy has been talking about the thing for two years, but never made an actual trial. He is now in Europe racing as a professional.

Anderson has been busy on the scheme since last January. He found it easy to get the necessary financial backing, but it was hard to procure a railroad suitable for the trial. Eventually, through the intervention of the Post-Dispatch, the magnificent roadbed of the St. Louis, St. Paul & Chicago was procured. Much credit is due Mr. Williams, the passenger agent, and Mr. Killen, master mechanic of the St. Louis, Chicago & St. Paul railroad, for the manner in which they took hold of the matter and helped it through.

ANDERSON TELLS WHY HE SHOULD SUCCEED.

The Daredevil Bicyclist Gives Many Good and Cogent Reasons Why a Mile Should Be Ridden in One Minute.

Many people think that I am going to break my neck or fail to make my proposed ride of a mile in one minute. I have considered the matter carefully, and I have come to the conclusion that I will do neither the one nor the other. The more I think about it and the closer the time of the trial approaches the more confident I feel that I will succeed. As for falling or hurting myself, I have never thought about that. I do not expect to fall. In fact, I am so confident that I will not fall that I have refused to consent to wear a pneumatic suit of armor, which the inventor guaranteed would protect me from serious accident in case of a fall. The suit would be light and would not impede my motion. But I feel so confident of making the ride without falling that I will not wear it.

As for the engine running away from me, I think that such a thing is out of the question. Once I get in behind it and get up speed I think I could not fall back if I wanted to. The inrushing current of air would not allow me to let go.

I have studied this thing for two years, and I feel confident that I will make the trip.

People will laugh at the assertion and call me a fool. If, three years ago, somebody told them that bicyclists would ride a mile in two minutes, they would say the same thing. Yet riding in less than 1:50 is of daily occurrence. When I first heard that John S. Johnson had ridden a mile in 1:56 I said it was untrue and impossible. Last year I rode a mile behind a quad in 1:51, and to speak truly, it did not inconvenience me a bit more than if I rode in 2:15.

Why do I believe that a mile can be ridden in one minute? Well, Johnson rode a straightaway mile behind a quad in 1:35¼. Then Dennis of Denver did a mile in 1:11 unpaced, but he had a strong wind blowing in his back. At Cheyenne, where there is a long stretch of level road, the veriest "dubs" ride in 1:25 when they can get a strong wind blowing behind them. Did not the Terrible Swede do a mile in 46⅘ seconds on a home trainer? The reason they all did this was because they got rid of the air resistance. Pedaling was easy under the circumstances, and the machine is plenty strong enough to stand the wear and tear of a mile in 40 seconds or less. Now, I have not rid myself of the air resistance, but have developed it into an assisting medium. Why should I not succeed?

SOUTH SIDE CLUB.

Valley Park will be the destination of the club runs to-day and Capt. Staehlin expects an attendance of over twenty-five members. A good dinner has been ordered and a swim in the Meramec is among the attractions.

Last Sunday's picnic was a grand success in spite of the rain which fell at Grantwood during the afternoon. Twenty-two members and their lady friends rode out to the destination in a four-horse omnibus, and a number of members made the trip on their wheels. President Butler took a number of photographs of the entire party, which will be preserved as souvenirs.

The members are somewhat surprised at the absence of Hower Canfield and Eddie Grath from both the club supper and picnic, as both carried off the big prizes in the club's road race last Saturday.

One application for membership is on file for the August meeting and twelve more are promised before that date.

A meeting of the club officers and committees was held on Thursday night, at which a thorough reorganization was effected. The rooms will henceforth be in charge of the following members on nights named: Monday, Robert Holm; Tuesday, C. R. Miltenberger; Wednesday, W. M. Butler; Thursday, H. L. Jurka; Friday, W. H. Wilson; Saturday, Alfred Staehlin. Capt. Staehlin was appointed chairman of the House Committee and made the purchasing agent of the club.

Charles Jungk, Henry Linnewerth, H. A. Canfield and E. A. Grath will ride under the club's colors at the races next Saturday and a big crowd of the members will be present to cheer them on to victory.

Cliff Peniston, C. A. Upmeyer, George Harroun and S. L. St. Jean, the club quartette did their full share in entertaining the participants in last Sunday's picnic.

"Napoleon" Wicke is as happy as a clam at high tide over his unexpected win of the second time prize in the club road race last Saturday. Had the mistake not been made of starting Grath too soon, H. Upmeyer would have landed this prize for the second time.

ROVER CYCLING CLUB.

The club went to Fenton Sunday and were caught in the rain and were compelled to ride home in the mud. Capt. Lightholder was more than pleased with the attendance. As there was a big crowd they had a merry time.

Ex-President Gerald B. O'Reilly has invited the club to spend the evening of Saturday, July 25, at his farm out on the Olive street road. The start will be made from the club-house at 4:30 p. m. on that day.

What is the matter with the Stags and Cross Countries? The Rovers want to talk the matter of that triangular road race over anyhow, whether there is a race or not. They will be glad to set a date for a meeting of the three committees.

The club run for Sunday has been called to St. Charles, Mo. Start will be made from the club-house promptly at 8:30 a. m.

SOUTHWEST CYCLE CLUB.

The members turned out in a body to attend the South Side road race last Saturday.

Since the agitation over the Southwest's coming road race began applications for membership have been coming in at a good rate.

Frank Sebastian will no doubt be the club's scratch man in the coming road event.

The club's treasurer is out among the members again and is a welcome addition.

The club rooms are being well patronized. When the weather is not too warm euchre is the attraction.

Tower Grove Park is a favorite spot with the members at present, and Fred Hunt leads in a large crowd of park riders.

ABOUT THE L. A. W.

The coming week will be a busy one for the L. A. W. officials, who have about made up their minds to bring about one of the largest mass meetings of wheelmen ever held here. The brewery run record of 2,370 is what they are striving for, and an elaborate entertainment will be provided. While work of recruiting the membership goes on it is not up to the pace set by Missouri's rivals—Illinois and Ohio—and to bring about better results a joint meeting of the Board of Officers, the City Street Committee, local Consuls and the Cycling Board of Trade will be held at the Cottage in Forest Park on Wednesday, July 22, at 8 p. m. sharp.

Chairman Northrop of the City Streets Committee has called a special meeting of the members at the Mercantile Club for Tuesday at 12:30 p. m., at which the Missouri Division officials will all be present to outline the order of business and select speakers for the joint meeting. In case of rain on Wednesday the joint meeting will be held on Thursday evening. The national meet at Louisville will also come up for discussion and a committee will be appointed to look after Missouri's delegation.

The new road signs have arrived and they are in every way a big improvement over the first lot. The background is a blue enamel and the directions are in raised white letters which can be easily read without dismounting from a wheel. Chairman Gilbert of the Road Book Committee has the second edition almost ready for the printer and it will be corrected and up to date in every particular.

No decision has as yet been handed down in the baggage test case and the outcome of this litigation will be watched with interest.

Twenty-five new members were added to Missouri's list last week, of which the following are from St. Louis: A. C. Smucker, C. C. C.; Dr. W. A. Lemin, Central C. C.; E. W. Zimmerman, Sunrise C. C.; W. F. Evans, K. C. C.; John H. Allen, Otto Ruder, F. A. Churchill, James G. Kuhn, [illegible] Krimeberg, [illegible] unattached. [illegible] has been appointed [illegible]

THE A. C. C.'S TOURNAMENT.

IT WILL TAKE PLACE NEXT SATURDAY AND SHOULD PROVE THE FINEST EVER GIVEN.

For two years past the Associated Cycling Clubs have been foremost in the promotion of first-class, high-grade cycle racing, and its meets have always been of a class that attracted the best of the speed merchants, as well as the lovers of the sport. No meets have been better attended or looked forward to with more anticipation, and no better contests or management has been seen than at the A. C. C. tournaments.

This gilt-edged reputation having been made, must be sustained; and now, with the co-operation of the Cycle Board of Trade, even greater results are in prospect.

At no time since the Pastime track was built has the number of men in training been so large as now, and a list of over 100 individual entries is expected by the time the entries close next Wednesday. The Joint Committee has labored earnestly and with anything like decent weather the crowd that will attend is estimated at 5,000. Through the efforts of Supt. Aiken the track has been put in the finest possible shape. All the turns are well banked and safe, and fast time is an assured fact in all of the events.

The Joint Committee selected the prizes last week, and they offer a most tempting array to the racing man. The entries already received will make the meet an unparalleled success, and as the open events do not close till next Wednesday, the largest number of racing men that have ever gathered at the Pastime track will compete for the prizes offered, which are as follows:

One mile novice—Diamond medal.

Half-mile open—First prize, pair opera glasses, $25; second, cane, $10.

Two mile tandem—Prizes, two gold watches, $30 each.

One mile handicap—First prize, silver tea set, $30; second, pair diamond sleeve buttons, $10.

One mile handicap race—First prize, diamond scarf pin, $33; second, diamond ring, $18; third, diamond locket, $12.

Two mile handicap—First prize, silver water set, $35; second, piano lamp, $16.

One-third mile, limited to riders 34 years of age or over—A. A. C. diamond medal.

In addition to the seven track events there will be exhibitions of fancy and trick riding by the best performers. Vollrath's band has been engaged to furnish the music, and a corps of efficient ushers will see that the spectators are properly seated. In case the number of entries is too large, the trial heats will be run off next Saturday morning.

The tandem race will be one of the novelties of the day, and seven teams have already been booked to start in it. The one-mile lap race will be the event of the day, and as it is a race for points, the scramble to win each lap will be worth going many miles to see. The track is easily reached by the Suburban electric cars, and the Page avenue division of the Lindell Railway lands passengers within two blocks of the gate.

The 34-year age-limit race will be hotly contested, as F. W. Buckley is determined to capture the prize, and if he succeeds it will become his property, as he has already won it twice. The gates to the grounds will be opened at 1:30 p. m., and at 2:30 p. m. sharp, the racing will begin. The result of each race will be announced by megaphone. The following wheelmen will act as officers of the track: Referee, Douglas W. Robert; Judges, Robert Holm, J. P. Fogarty, R. L. Hill; Timers, W. M. Butler, A. C. Davis, R. E. Perry; Scorers, A. L. Jordan, M. R. Windhorst, T. J. Dempsey; Clerks of Course, D. T. Punch and C. F. Knower; Starter, W. P. Laing; Announcer, G. A. Plaiss; Umpires, E. L. Morgan and assistants.

BRANCH GUARDS BICYCLE CORPS.

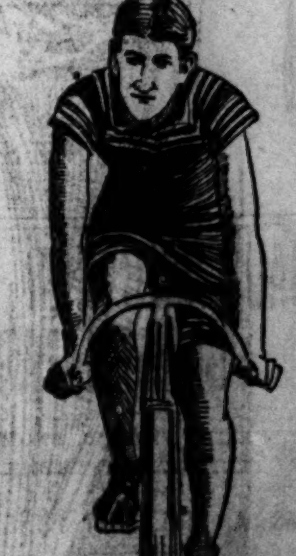
The boys returned on Monday from Springfield, tired, sunburned and very sleepy but well pleased with the week's camp, which they thoroughly enjoyed.

The corps was called upon to give several exhibition drills, and they did their best and proved to be one of the features of the camp. A drill on bicycles is a decided novelty to most of the people in that part of the country, and the visitors to the camp heartily applauded the efforts of the boys. The ground on which the drills were given was simply awful. As there were nothing but ruts and gullies and holes everywhere, it was worse riding than on a corduroy road. Luckily, however, the wheels stood the rough usage well, and there was little or no use for the extra parts which were carried as a precaution against accident.

In the races the corps did not make a very good showing, the only one to give an account of himself being Tom Wickenden, who won third place in the five mile event. Willie Carr, Charlie Mulroy, Ikey Woeldike and "Flying" Steinmeyer would in all probability be going around the track yet if they had not been compelled to come home.

Much interest was shown by the army officers present in the maneuvers of the corps, and Capt. Chase, Eighth Cavalry, went from Jefferson Barracks to Springfield especially to see the drill of the corps on the field. The officers seem to be well satisfied with the result.

E. E. ANDERSON.



The accompanying cut is a speaking and riding likeness of Evan E. Anderson, the daring St. Louis cyclist, who will on Sunday, Aug. 9, 1896, endeavor to ride a mile in 60 seconds, paced by a locomotive. Mr. Anderson was born at Stonington, Christian County, Ill., in 1873, and is therefore 23 years old. His family removed to Roodhouse, Ill., when he was 10 years old and it was there that he learned to ride a bicycle. He is 6 feet and ½ inch in height and weighs [illegible] pounds. He first rode a bicycle in 1886, beginning early on the old ordinary. For many years he rode steadily, but it was not until 1892 that he became a racing man. For the past three years he has enjoyed a national reputation as a racing cyclist. He has lived in St. Louis since 1894, and at present rides for Jordan & Sanders, the Washington avenue cycle dealers. While never a real crackerjack, he has always been regarded as one of the cleverest and most dangerous men on the track. He rides with his head as well as with his feet and is especially good in a big crowd. He never gets a fall under any circumstances, [illegible]

THE WASP WAIST MUST GO.

FASHION HAS COME TO THE RESCUE OF DRESS REFORMERS AT LAST.

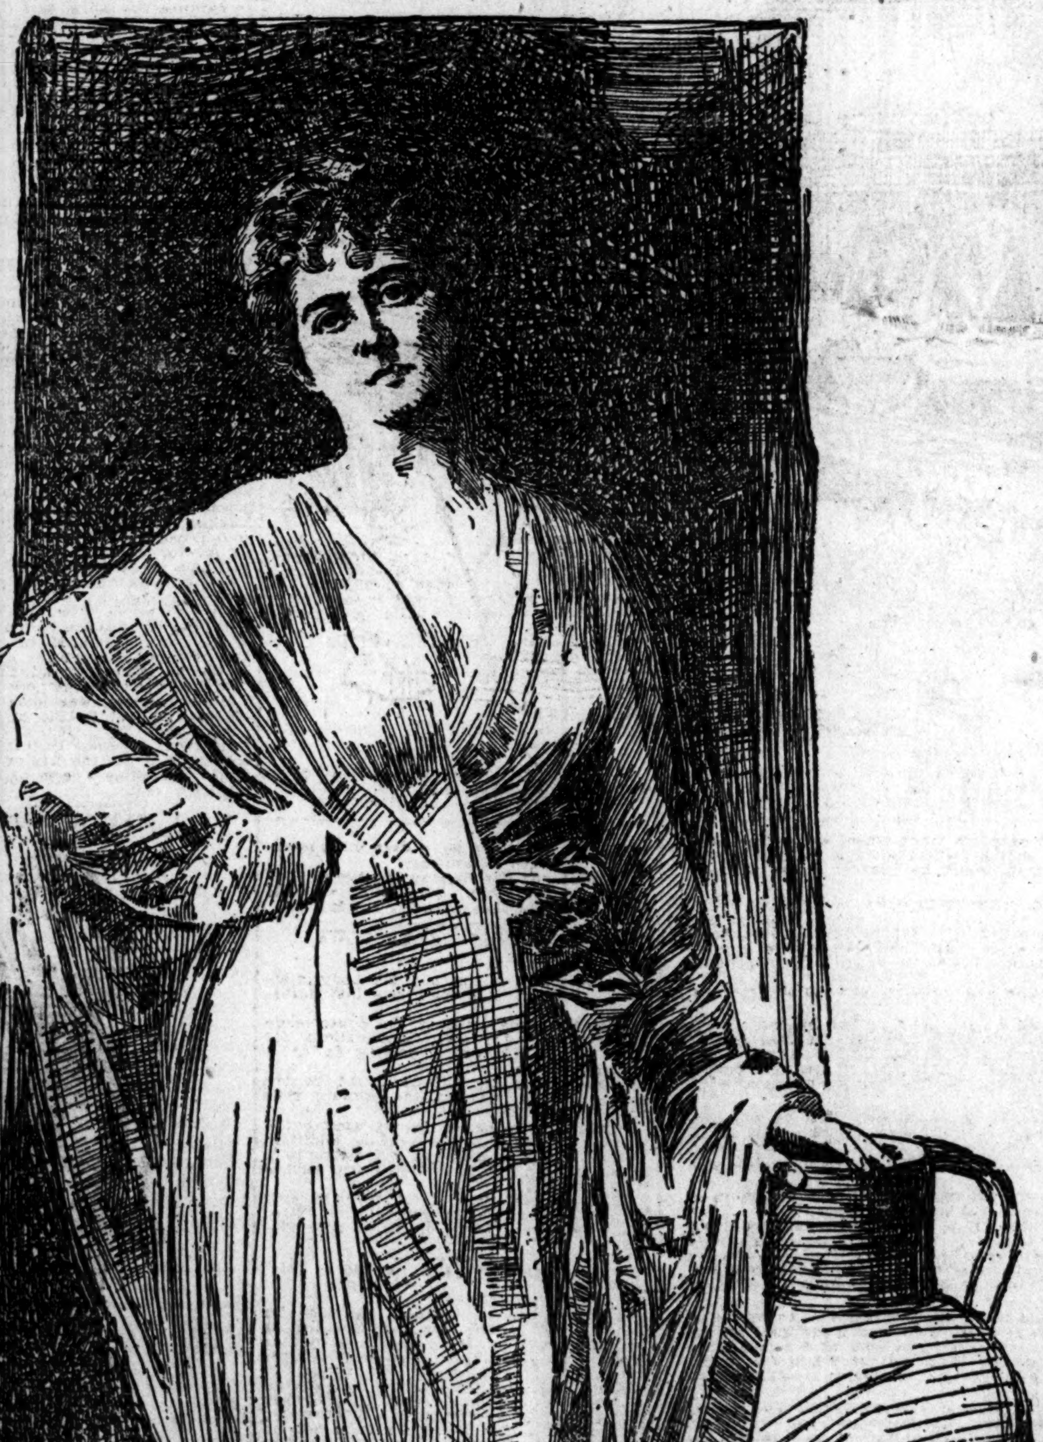
Whether owing to the long continued efforts of dress reformers or whether by a whim of fashion which occasionally takes a whim in the direction of health and good sense, the fact remains that the wasp waist is doomed.

Artists and physicians have pointed to the proportions of the Venus de Milo, the former as embodying the lines of real beauty from the artistic standpoint, the latter as showing the lines nature intended woman to have, and which she could not change by artificial compression without paying the penalty in impaired health. Anatomists have shown that continued compression ended in permanent changes in the spinal column.

In the meantime lovely woman admired the proportions of the undressed Venus. But she could not judge her own form by the same standard. A woman with a big waist—that is a natural waist—was out of the fashion. It was no use to try to persuade her that nature knew her business as well as Dame Fashion when it came to ordering the size of waists. And so for generations the further woman went away from the lines of nature, the more fascinating she was supposed to be—because fashion said so.

But now fashion, ever fickle, has changed her mind, and woman is to be released from the deadly grip of the tight laced corset. Her daily martrydom to style is soon to be over. Paris has declared in favor of the unconfined and expansive waist. Whatever Paris says in things fashionable, goes. The word will reach St. Louis in easy stages via New York and as soon as it is officially promulgated it will be obeyed.

Just to show how a woman with proportions near to the standard of artists really looks the accompanying illustra[illegible]n from the New York Journal is repro[illegible]d. It is the portrait of a young wo[illegible]ho has succeeded in satisfying th[illegible]tic and fashionable standards. She has been a favorite subject for painters, and she has also succeeded in moving among her fellows without arousing the criticisms of the dressmakers. The former have declared her figure perfect, according to the classical requirements, and the latter have not denied her the quality of "style." From which the wasp-waisted who foresee that they must allow their waists to expand, may take courage. The possession of statuesque proportions will not utterly bar them from the realm of the stylish.



THE VENUS DE MILO WAIST IS NOW THE STYLE.

Earliest Bookplate.

The earliest bookplate known is the Ilgerone, which dates from about 1450. Only two copies have been discovered, and they are valued at about $10,200 apiece.

Mint Marks on Our Coins.

One can easily tell where the United States coins were made by the "mint marks," which they bear. Coins minted at Charlotte, N. C., bear the letter C; those made at Dohlonega, Ga., the letter D; those at New Orleans the letter O; those at Carson City the letter C, and those at San Francisco the letter S.

A MECHANICAL PITCHER.

Prof. Hinton's Invention Will Put Breitenstein Out of the Business.

Prof. Hinton of Princeton College has invented a mechanical pitcher, which is attracting much attention from base ball players. The apparatus is not yet wholly perfected, but, in an interview, he tells of the improvement he hopes to make in the base ball field and gives an accurate description of the machine. It has been tried at Princeton and found entirely practicable.

The propulsive power which throws the ball is germinated by the explosion of a cartridge contained in an internal tube.

Speaking of the machine, Prof. Hinton said:

"Round the internal tube is an air chamber, which serves to prevent the generation of too great velocities, acting as a sort of buffer to guard against the violent effects which occur when an explosion takes place in a limited space. If the ball sticks or jams in the tube in any way the gases generated by the powder heap up behind it and drive it out of the muzzle with a velocity greater than desirable. This defect I intend to remedy by the introduction of a valve to serve the same purpose as the safety-valve of a steam engine.

"Provided with such a valve, the instrument would be quite without danger even in inexperienced hands.

"As there is very general ignorance on the subject of how fast a base ball thrown by a pitcher goes through the air, it will no doubt interest many people to know that, according to a careful measurement I have made, a base ball thrown by a well-known pitcher goes over the distance to the plate in six-tenths of a second.

"The problem of imparting a curve to the ball turned out to be a far easier one than that of regulating the velocity. After trying many devices for imparting a rotary motion to the ball of a more or less complicated nature, I hit upon the expedient of simply copying nature.

"I found that the fingers placed on one side only of the muzzle of a gun will give the spinning motion to the ball which is required. But they must be placed wide apart, so as to partly hold the ball between them.

"The best coating for these fingers is rubber. They give the most satisfactory result if from the point where they join the gun they project slightly from the line of the tube so that the ball as it leaves the tube comes in contact with a slight shoulder of rubber.

"These fingers can be made of various shapes and sizes. Those that grow larger away from the muzzle of the gun give, when a quick ball is sent, curves of extraordinary sweep. If the ball goes with the same speed the fingers produce the same curve on two successive discharges. Thus we may say that the whole problem of a mechanical pitcher is reduced to the one problem of delivering a ball of uniform speed."

A QUEER UMBRELLA.

Carried by a Man Col. Calliper Once Knew in Storkville Centre, Vt.

"About as singular a man as I ever knew," said Col. Calliper to a New York Sun reporter, "was a friend of mine named Abner Gillpostlington, who once lived in Storkville Centre, Vt. Mr. Gillpostlington was a man of means, and a sensible, hard-headed man in all respects but one. I've heard of people who crawled in between feather beds, and shut themselves up in closets, and that sort of thing during thunder storms. Mr. Gillpostlington didn't do anything like that. If he had occasion to go abroad when a thunder storm was raging, maybe to the store for something, he always went just the same; but on such occasions he always carried an umbrella with a lightning rod attached to it. The forked tip projected well up above the tip of the umbrella, and the rod was carried down along one of the ribs in glass insulators held in brackets attached to the rib and so on down to the ground.

"To see Mr. Gillpostlington walking along the streets of Storkville Centre in a thunder storm with that umbrella over him was to see one of the most remarkable sights of the town. When he came to the store, if that was where he was going, he would close his umbrella on the sidewalk and lower the point of it, to get it through the doorway, as one might lower a spear, and then walk into the store with it, while everybody inside stood back to give him room. He would lay the umbrella down on some barrels or boxes, so as not to bend the tips of the lightning rod, buy what he wanted, back out into the street again with his umbrella, open it, and walk off with his forked lightning rod above him, and the ground wire trailing along on the ground at his side.

"But Mr. Gillpostlington never was struck by lightning, and, in fact, the lightning seemed to shun all that he possessed. So far as I know no building or tree on his place was ever struck by lightning, and Mr. Gillpostlington himself died in bed in the ordinary way; but the memory of his lightning-rod umbrella still survives in Storkville Centre, Vt."

PRINCE OF THE SLUMS.

Strange Story of a Noble Zulu Who Died in London.

When the Coroner's inquest was held on the body of Castella Madonna Grove, a domestic servant, aged 23, who dropped dead in Bethnal Green road, London, the other day, it was discovered that the dead woman was the grand-daughter of a prince.

Unlike other exiled scions of royalty who from time to time settle in London, this prince, who was driven by civil war from his ancestral home in Zululand, lived picturesquely, it is said, and until he died retained his striking individuality in dress. He is described as having been accustomed to wear a "garment of feathers" and no shoes or stockings. Like a true child of the sun, he took a quart of gin a day and called it "fire water." Most of his London life was spent between the bars that dispensed liquors and the bars that dispensed law.

ROMANCE OF SEA DIVING.

EPISODES IN LOVE, COMEDY AND TRAGEDY WHICH PARALLEL FICTION.

Submarine exploration has furnished material often enough for the novelist and dramatist, but the romantic developments which from time to time come into divers' actual experiences parallel anything told in works of fiction. The deep-sea diver trusts proverbially to his luck; he never knows what he may find to contend against when the sky has faded from sight and the waters have closed above him, and fascinating indeed are the stories that he occasionally brings to the surface.

An exciting submarine episode was one that occurred off the New Zealand coast a short time back, and which set up quite a public sensation owing to its dramatic circumstances. A merchant ship had foundered, and two local divers went down to ascertain the chances of recovering the cargo. Both were experts, says Household Words, and there was a double rivalry between them on account of the fact that one had been courting a pretty girl who, it appeared, had previously tip-tilted her nose at the other. Still, it never entered the lucky lover's head to suspect anything in the shape of foul play, until, as they moved along together in search of the wreck, the second diver suddenly threw his rival down and deliberately attempted to wrest the life-line from him. He succeeded; then placing his helmet in contact with the other's so that his voice could be heard, he announced that he was determined they should die together, and the girl should wed neither.

A mad struggle ensued, to describe which words are perhaps powerless. What might have happened as a matter of conjecture; but those above, noticing the erratic tugs at the tubes, commenced hauling up in a hurry. Presently the two appeared at the surface, in a deadly embrace still, and both well-nigh at their final gasp. The would-be murderer, indeed, had paid the penalty by bursting a blood-vessel, and lived just long enough to know that his rival had put himself out of reach of jealousy by tying the marriage knot.

Divers' romances, however, are not always unpleasantly sensational. The "luck" is sometimes of a brighter order, as in the case of a young native of Cork last year.

Employed as a diver by the Ocean Salvage Corporation, he was sent out to help lighten a passenger vessel that had gone down in the vicinity of Sandy Hook. While hacking a way through some debris on the lower deck, his axe stuck deeply in a metal casket, which he stuffed into his belt for subsequent examination. It turned out to be a case of valuable jewelry belonging to a young American lady, who had survived the disaster, and whose father counted his dollars by the thousand. Restoration being made, the diver received a handsome reward for his trouble. But the bit of romance began here; there was a sequel that is uncommon out of novels. That chance meeting brought about a mutual liking between the two, and, three months later, heiress and lucky diver walked from the altar arm-in-arm.

Even more interesting, in a similar way, was the experience of a diver, who, having the misfortune to lose a leg in one of his submarine exploits, won a wife and a fortune as compensation.

It was in this way. The lady, a widow, was a resident of Ceylon, and a stock of very costly dresses had been ordered by her from a Parisian firm. These were conveyed by steamer as far as Colombo, and then transferred to a small trading vessel to be taken farther along the coast. On nearing its port, however, the trader collided and sank, and the lady was all but inconsolable. There happened to be a British transport waiting in the vicinity to repair damages, and a diver on board volunteered to make an attempt to recover the mourned apparel. Armed with ax and grappling hook, he went down and succeeded in extricating the chest, and attaching the hook. Then he fastened the connecting cable to his waist and prepared to ascend, and, upon emerging from the hatchwayway, was spellbound at seeing the dreaded form of a shark hovering expectantly in his path to the surface. The creature had evidently been attracted by an instinctive idea that dead bodies would be released from the wreck and showed no intention of going away unsatisfied. The diver gave himself up for lost; to stay below much longer was impossible, and the moment he moved, the shark might make a rush and sever air tubes and life-line. Finally, desperation and exhaustion impelled him to give the signal, and he was hauled swiftly towards the surface. Not quite speedily enough, however; the shark seized and nipped off his leg at the thigh just as he went to scramble up the ladder. The dresses were recovered, but the diver's life and reason hung in the balance for a long time, and the end of it was that the lady marked her appreciation of his loss and pluck by falling in love with and taking him for a husband.

A very thrilling submarine romance was that which took place off the coast of France a few years back. A cargo vessel had foundered unaccountably within sight of port, and a couple of divers were dispatched below to report as to the cause of the disaster, and the prospect of raising the goods—A. representing the firm of insurance brokers who had instituted the investigation, and B. acting for the owners and captain.

A. reached the bottom first, and found himself on a bed of white sand. Presently, as he flashed his electric light to and fro, he made out the ill-fated mass of timber resting upon a cluster of crags, which he climbed at once. A conscientious inspection of the hull showed him what he had half-suspected; design had been at work, and there was an auger hole through which the water had evidently rushed and brought destruction. He turned to point this out to his companion, when the latter suddenly clutched him by the waist, dragged him down again to the sand and murderously tried to break the glass in his helmet. Believing that he had to cope with a madman, A. made a fierce fight for life; they rolled over and over in the sand, which went up in clouds about them. However, he was worsted, and had lost hold upon his line; it was cunning alone that saved him from an awful death. He feigned a swoon; then as B. gave the signal and went to ascend, caught him by the legs in a fast grip, and was hauled up with him. Once on deck he really lost his senses, and it was some time before he could tell his tale.

Meanwhile, B. had gone ashore, and was attempting to leave the country when arrested. At the subsequent trial the infamous facts leaked out. It transpired that the shipowners had over-insured the cargo, arranged for the vessel to be scuttled at a certain time, and then, driven to extremity, had promised B. a share in the profits if he took care that the imminent discovery should never be allowed to reach the surface. The plot had failed, and speedy punishment followed for all concerned.

TO NAVIGATE THE AIR.

Delos E. Rice of Detroit Has a New Plan Which He Declares Works.

Delos E. Rice, a Detroit machinist, has prepared the plans for an airship and is waiting for someone to furnish the funds for the building of a trial vessel.

His plans provide for an air shaft 30 feet across and 50 feet high, constructed of aluminum. In this shaft is to be placed a large fan which will force the air downward and thus raise the ship. There are to be several gas chambrs which will be filled with gas generated by heat from the engines which furnish the power for running the fan. Around the airshaft on all sides will be placed apertures which can be opened and closed by the engineer and which are intended to serve in steering the craft.

Mr. Rice is 60 years old, and has patented several successful inventions. He thinks that a vessel of the size he has planned would easily carry fifty persons.

THE X RAY HAS A RIVAL.

DIABOLICAL INVENTION WHICH THREATENS TO UTTERLY DESTROY PRIVACY.

The X ray has arrived. As if that peace-destroyer were not enough to set humanity by the ears, an Eastern man has just patented a contrivance which enables a person in one apartment to see everything that goes on in another room. What makes it worse, this knowledge is gained in secret.

This strange device consists of a peculiar arrangement of tube and adjustable mirrors, and the result of their use is surprising.

It is constructed on the principle of the human eye, and no substance has yet been found which it is unable to penetrate. The rays are reflected back as clearly as light from an ordinary mirror.

By this means a person can train the contrivance on the wall of a room and perceive the slightest movement of the person or persons on the other side without the knowledge of the latter.

Another invention of a very similar character enables a person on the outside of a building to gaze unhindered on the actions of the persons inside.

About this diabolical machine there is not one saving clause. It can be used either by day or night, and the up-to-date burglar can peep into your bedroom and see whether you are asleep, whether you have a revolver or not, and if so, what caliber. Then, after satisfying his mind on these points, he can go ahead and "burgle" until he gets tired.

These hysteria-breeding machines utterly annihilate the privacy of home.

Think of a young man in a boarding house with one of these deadly weapons trained on his room.

Think of him when he enters the place at night, perspiring at every pore, goes to a drawers, pulls out one of those long white things with frills down the front and starts to un——

Oh, it is terrible!

Suppose the blonde young woman across the way he has so often admired but never addressed, should happen to be experimenting with those tubes and mirrors and things just about the time he was shedding his clothes.

Great Scott! What chance will a retiring young man have if he is to be subjected to this sort of thing.

What self-respecting young man could make love properly to a girl if he even suspected that a combination like that was being directed at him like a murderous-looking gatling gun?

The window blinds, which from time immemorial have been regarded with favor by lovers, young and old, would be of no more service than the gauze on a statue or a mosquito bar in "der vinter time."

If they should even sit on the sofa together it might become a matter of neighborhood gossip, and as for an exchange of saliva or anything like that, it would be out of the question.

Suppose a man had in his employ a pretty servant girl. Suppose he should go home some night and accidentally meet her in the hallway. Suppose a short, spasmodic season of labial demonstration should follow and his wife should hear the unusual sound. Then suppose she should turn her X-ray contrivance on her belated spouse and behold with her own eye the proof of his perfidy.

Then what?

No man with a pretty servant girl and a rubber-necked wife would be safe.

And what of the young woman? Of what use will be their fairy bowers and scented boudoirs when any old Peeping Tom with a thirty-six inch mirror is liable to slip up behind the garden wall and take a squint at them at the most critical moment of the day?

Fleas will bite and rubber elastic will slip and pins will fall out, and what is a girl to do if these matters cannot be attended to instanter without the fear of being seen?

These are questions which cannot be overlooked, even in the hurly burly of life and all this talk of 16 to 1 or sixteen to win.

Yet there are uses to which this contrivance, however dreadful, could be put to advantage. Every Grand-jury should be provided with one—especially Grand-juries in St. Louis.

By this means the members should be able to determine how many "growlers" there are in the City Jail besides the prisoners, and discover the identity of the mysterious personage by whom they are "rushed."

They could also find out if any other captive is preparing to do the Noble Shepard act, and also how many guards usually sleep at once, and where.

This contrivance, if turned on the office of Herr Louie Wagner, might reveal the very facts for which the members of the Grand-jury are now looking.

When this new invention shall come into common use, such things as secret political caucuses will be impossible, and Uncle Filley will be able to tell when "Silent Cy" is whetting his knife, sending out a spy or breaking down the door.

These be days of wonderful inventions, but the man who contrived this diabolical arrangement, which is as yet unnamed, will take his life in his hands when he starts his agents out on the road.

WILL E. ADAMS.

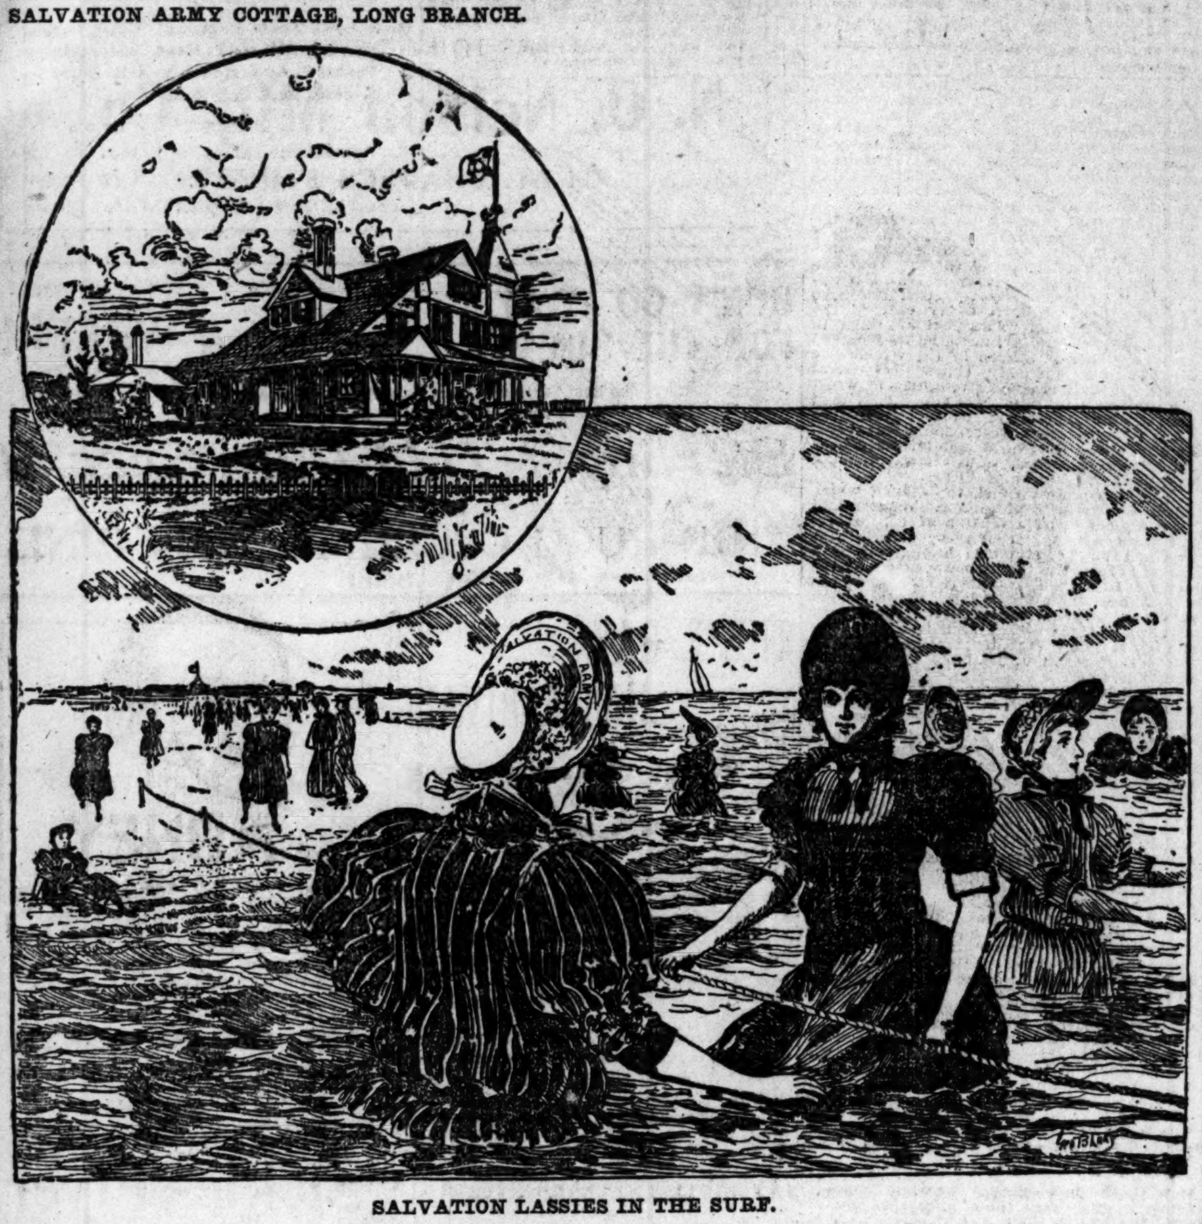
Mr. W. E. Adams is a commercial traveler who has abandoned the use of railroad trains and travels all over Missouri and Illinois on his bicycle. He represents a local wall paper firm and annually visits 200 towns in the course of business. He is of powerful physique, and says he has grown stronger from using the bicycle. He affords the best illustration yet given of the adaptation of the bicycle for business purposes.

SALVATION ARMY LASSIES BATHING.

EVERY MORNING THEY MAY BE SEEN IN THE SURF AT LONG BRANCH.

Despite their intense religious enthusiasm the officers of the Salvation Army believe in recreation and healthful, moral, invigorating pleasure. It is a novel sight to see the red jerseys bobbing up and down in the waves on the Jersey beach, in front of the North Long Branch Salvation Army Home of Rest, when the Salvationists are battling with old Neptune.

SALVATION ARMY COTTAGE, LONG BRANCH.



SALVATION LASSIES IN THE SURF.

The Home of Rest is at a delightful point, far away from the homes of summer visitors, so that the officers can pursue their pleasure without attracting undue attention. The home is an attractive cottage, with spacious veranda, commanding an uninterrupted view of the ocean. It has accommodations for thirty. The dormitory is spotlessly clean. The bedsteads are of white enamelled iron and the bed covers and walls as white as snow.

"All day the windows are open to the sea, and the air is so sweet that a feeling of home and rest comes over one immediately upon entering the room," said Ensign Connett, who is in charge, to a reporter.

This season will be particularly gay, if such a term is permissible in referring to the Salvationists. The vacations of the officers of the Eastern division of the army are arranged on the system on vogue in the city department. The officers can easily obtain an extension of leave if necessary.

Early rising is the rule. The officers are up betimes and after morning prayers and a lounge on the veranda are ready for the event of the day, a dip in the ocean. Bathing towels are sought and presently the lads and lasses emerge from their dormitories equipped for the fray. While there is no regulation governing the wearing of the red jerseys in the surf, the officers prefer to do so. The same custom applies to the young women officers, who cling to their poke bonnets, which look not unlike the ordinary surf hat trimmed with blue.

Some of the officers have become expert swimmers and venture far from shore. The women who can swim get up impromptu races, and it is amusing to watch their poke bonnets gliding through the waves. After the dip come a rest and romp on the beach. Sometimes the officers run races on the beach and the young women lieutenants and captains outrun their "brothers," as they call the male officers.

By this time an appetite is aroused for the delicious oatmeal, scrambled eggs and meat, with fried potatoes, bread and butter, tea and coffee of the bill of fare.

An everchanging, but a happy one, is this Salvation Army family.

BE YOUR OWN OCULIST.

Here's a Way to Test Your Eyesight, With Very Practical Results.

You may be your own oculist, and in a very practical and simple way. All you need is a stereoscope and a photograph.

That arrangement in which the picture holder slides up and down a flat frame, trombone fashion, is the best sort of stereoscope for the purpose, although any will do, and the photograph that will give the best results is a cabinet size view of some locality, with people in it.

You put the photograph in the holder and focus it just so that you can see the faces clearly. Then close the left eye and look at the picture intently with your right eye, while you count thirty slowly. Now close the right eye and look at the picture with the left eye for the same time. Then open both eyes and stare at the picture without changing the focus.

Something queer will happen. The figures on the one side of the picture will seem to move across the view and group themselves with those on the other side, and—this is the point of the experiment—the figures will always move away from the weak eye. Moreover, they move with a very precise relation of speed to the weakness of vision.

If the left eye, for example, be quite weak, the figures will move very quickly across the plane of sight to the right side, while if there is but a slight defect the movement will be gradual, and so on.

A queer thing about this experiment is that, simple as it seems, it will bring out defects of vision that have never been suspected, and another queer thing is that it will demonstrate the cases in which both eyes are of equal power to be surprisingly exceptional.

Fauna of Hawaii.

Some interesting discoveries have recently been made about animal life on the Hawaiian Islands. It appears that all the land and fresh water shells there are peculiar to the locality. Forty-seven out of the seventy-eight species of birds, and 700 out of the 1,000 species of insects, do not exist in any other portion of the globe.

The English Language.

English is spoken by 45,000,000 persons in the British Isles, by probably 57,000,000 of the 60,000,000 inhabitants of the United States, by 4,000,000 persons in Canada, by 3,000,000 in Australia, by 3,700,000 West Indians, and by 1,000,000 in India and other British colonies, bringing the total of the English-speaking race to over 100,000,000.

ANOTHER OLDEST MAN.

ANIMAL BAROMETERS.

They May Be Relied On to Tell When a Storm Is Coming.

Animals are often better barometers than the meteorological instruments in the Weather Bureaus. This unique branch of weather lore is just now receiving considerable attention from weather experts.

Most animals are exceedingly sensitive to all atmospheric conditions, and are constantly making weather forecasts in their own way. It has been found that these natural barometers are often more trustworthy than the learned weather prophets.

Several very ingenious attempts have recently been made to turn this instinct to some commercial value. A number of very unique living barometers have been put upon the market. The cheapest form and the one which will probably become the most popular is the frog barometer.

A small green frog has been found in Germany which always comes out of the water when cold or wet weather is approaching. The frogs are caught and kept in glass jars furnished with a tiny ladder and half filled with water. The frog prophet sits high and dry on the top of his ladder for several hours before a storm, and climbs down to the bottom when the weather is to be fair and clear.

The most remarkable of natural barometers is the one operated by leeches. 'Si' Merryweather, an old meteorologist, prepared them in such a way that the leeches ring a little bell whenever a storm is coming and remain silent when the weather is to be fair.

The leeches are kept in bottles partly filled with water. They remain in the water until it is about to rain, when they climb up and cling to the sides of the bottle.

In 1851 a bill was introduced in Congress to establish a system of beach barometers at all the principal seaport towns to assist the Weather Bureau, but the plan was never carried out.

Wild animals are much better weather prophets than domestic animals. A dog or a horse may know that a storm is approaching, but it is sure of a shelter and does not particularly fear it. A wild animal must protect itself, and therefore keeps a sharp lookout.

A little knowledge of the habits of the most familiar wild animals will enable anybody to rival the Weather Bureau, for some time before a storm rats and mice run noisily about in the house walls. Almost every house is thus provided with an audible though invisible barometer.

Among birds, swallows and rooks instead of flying about remain at home when a storm is brewing, and robins hide in bushes or seek the shelter of roofs and chimneys.

A bee is never caught in the rain, and ants, wasps and spiders will be found to prepare their nests, eggs or webs to withstand bad weather many hours in advance of the coming of a storm.

The ordinary domestic animals will also tell you what the weather is to be if you will only take the trouble to understand their language. All animals become more or less restless at the approach of a storm of any kind. Cats and dogs scratch and move about restlessly, while their fur looks less bright and glossy than usual.

It is always a sure sign of rain when horses and cattle stretch their necks and sniff the air for a long time. A flock of sheep is also a pretty safe guide. They are very nervous animals and are usually sensitive to changes in the weather. They become frolicksome at such times, or they will turn their backs to the wind and quarrel among themselves.

Goats tell of the coming of bad weather by bleating incessantly and by seeking the most sheltered spots. This uneasiness is even more marked in pigs, which run incessantly about carrying straw to their sty and ceasing to wallow in the mud. Chickens huddle closely together, while donkeys always hang their ears forward.

A NEW KIND OF NEW WOMAN.

THE ONLY FEMALE NEWSPAPER CARRIER—DOES IT TO GET THROUGH COLLEGE.

"When a woman will she will,
You may depend on't."

The old lines were never better verified than by Miss Clara Howard, a plucky Iowa girl, who is a special student in philosophy in the University of California.

This young woman wanted a collegiate edjucation, but she was poor. This was no obstacle to her. She proceeded to work her way through and she became a newspaper carrier, perhaps the first woman to engage in that calling. She bought a route from a San Francisco newspaper. It was only a small and not very remunerative one, but she worked it up until it made her a good living. She made a house to house canvass of the town of Berkeley and got a large of subscribers. She was solicitor, canvasser and collector, all in one, and kept up with her studies besides.

The paper carrier has no easy job. He must make his rounds in all weathers, and be on time or he will lose his patronage. The young lady carrier, Miss Clara Howard, at last made the route so valuable that she was able to employ a number of boys to deliver the papers, and so relieved herself of some of the actual hard work.

She entered college originally in the class of '87. That year the East Oregon Government land excitement broke out. She left college and with her brother filed a claim to some timber land, homesteaded it, and lived on it while fulfilling the legal requirements.

But she did not realize enough money to carry out her project of taking the full course in the University. All the same she went to Berkely and fulfilled the scriptural injunction to do whatever her hand found to do. She did housework, clerical work and anything else she could find until she decided there was more money in the newspaper route than in working for wages.

And yet she is not a new woman in the accepted sense of that term. She does not believe in woman suffrage, does not ride a wheel or wear bloomers, and does not go in for society. She believes in work and she believes that no manual labor is degrading to any one, regardless of sex.

"I believe in work," said the new woman philosopher. "I think that any woman really interested in any intellectual pursuit does not need to allow any pecuniary obstacles to interfere with it. She can always reach an intellectual object through manual labor. It is a means to an end and besides it is conducive to clearness of thought. I believe, also, in simplifying physical wants for the sake of intellectual gratification, and the demands of the understanding constitute the highest imperative.

"We all have our fads and mine is philosophy."

FROM SIXTEEN TO TWENTY.

Girls Look Only on the Bright and Pleasing Sides of Life.

A young man addresses to Edward W. Bok the query: "Why is it that in so many cases, I might almost say the majority of cases, a quiet, well-behaved, earnest-minded, religious young man's seriousness is ignored by so many girls (between 16 and 20), and the company of giddy, idle, senseless youths preferred?" and in the July Ladies' Home Journal editorial reply is made.

Mr. Bok contends that girls at that age take few things seriously, and are not given to looking upon the serious side of life; that only the bright, pleasant side attracts them. "It is only natural that to a girl of such an age the young man of bright conversation, flippant and meaningless though that talk may be, has an indefinable attraction. She would far rather have it that he can dance well than that he can recite Emerson to her. It is the dancing time of her life, and not the Emersonian period. She is apt to notice a man's clothes more than his character. She likes the man better who pays her a pretty compliment than the one who says something serious.

The young man who pays her graceful attentions is pleasing to her; she does not seek to penetrate beyond the mere compliment. And why should she? Young men are simply one form of her amusement; she does not take them more seriously than she does anything else. The young man of presentable appearance, who dresses well and has a command of the small talk of society, is her girlish Jack-in-the-box. The more attention he pays to her, the more he flatters her, the better she apt to like him.

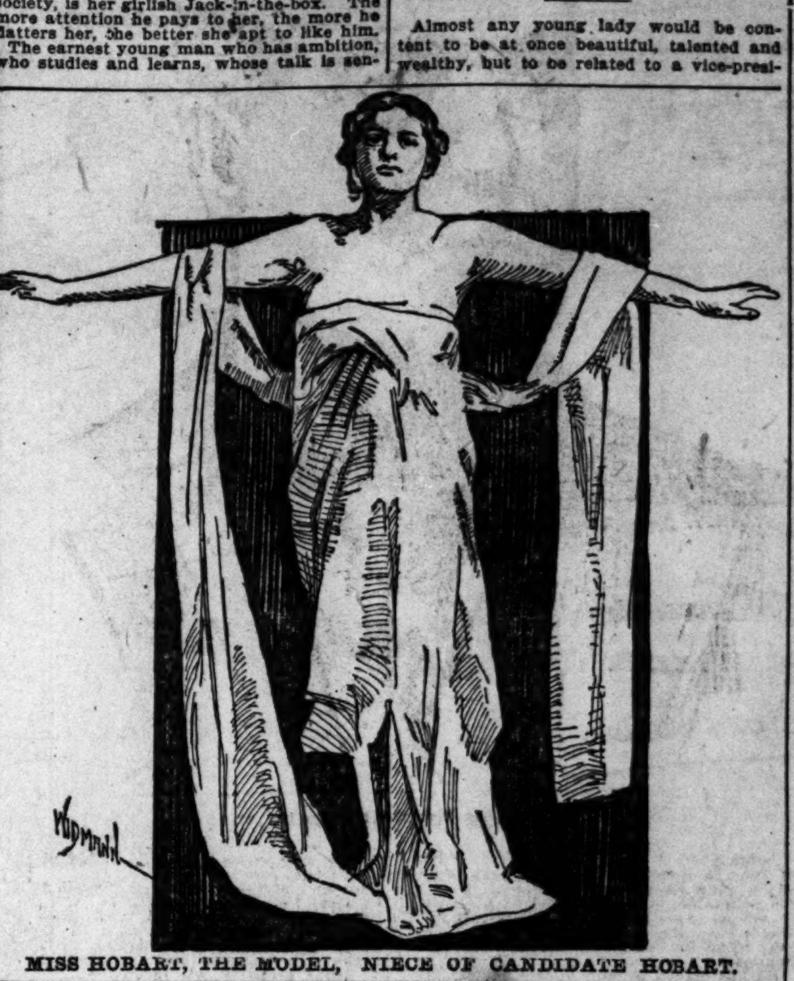
The earnest young man who has ambition, who studies and learns, whose talk is sensible rather than light, is a bit tiresome to her. She may admire his high purposes so far as she can grasp them. She may respect him. But if she is going to a party she does not want his company. She passes him by for the other fellow who is graceful in the dance. And is she to be blamed or to be censured for this? Not a bit of it. While she is a girl she does as a natural, healthy girl should; she lives her years of enjoyment and gets as much pleasure out of them as she can. For this she is a girl. But if he will watch her after she counts her years with the figure two he will observe that slowly but surely a process of gradual development takes place in the girl whom he believed to be without thought or reason. And equally sure will be his discovery that the companion of her dances is not so eagerly welcomed by her as once he was.

"He will then gradually discover that the girl is not the light-minded butterfly that he thought her to be. She becomes interested in other things; conversations which bored her a year or two earlier now begin to have some meaning for her. She begins to regard the internal value of things. She looks at young men from a different standpoint. The young man who can simply dance well does not represent the same thing to her. She begins to look for something else in the young men who come to her. The woman has simply begun to develop; the girl is ceasing to be."

MISS HOBART AS A MODEL.

THE NIECE OF THE VICE-PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE IS AN ACTRESS AND AUTHORESS.

Almost any young lady would be content to be at once beautiful, talented and wealthy, but to be related to a vice-presidential candidate is an honor which even the most fortunate would hardly despise.



MISS HOBART, THE MODEL, NIECE OF CANDIDATE HOBART.

Such is the lot of Miss Margot Hobart, a relative of Hon. Garrett E. Hobart, recently nominated as the running mate of Maj. William McKinley.

Those who saw "The Milk White Flag" last year may remember a young woman with light brown curls and a faultless figure, both admirably set off by the messenger boy's cap and suit she wore in the play. That was Miss Hobart.

She is a daughter of the late Francis E. Hobart of New York, and is 19 years of age. She was educated at the Convent of the Sacred Heart in New York City. Her father was a cordage merchant, and at his death left her a fortune of $90,000, which she will inherit when she shall become of age.

As a child she possessed a remarkable figure, and when Nicholas Benvenuti, the artist, was engaged to decorate the Castle Square Theater in Boston he met her and persuaded her to pose for him. She became famous as a model and afterwards posed for W. Granville Smith, Robert Reid, George Wright, Archie Gunn, W. S. Watson and others.

That life, however, did not please the young woman, then budding into full womanhood. She was energetic and vivacious, with a good voice and a strong penchant for the stage, and less than two years ago she obtained a minor position with "The Brownies."

A week later she joined "The Milk White Flag" company and afterward, during the same season, played in "The Strange Adventures of Miss Brown."

For the coming season Miss Hobart has been engaged by Jeff D'Angelis for his starring tour, but prior to that she will appear in a New York theater in a sketch written by herself.

Miss Hobart is ambitious in a literary way and has written several poems and serial stories, which have been published in a small volume.

In spite of her high social connections, she is a very independent young woman.

"If I am not capable of making a reputation through my own efforts, I will not be dependent upon my relatives to raise me to fame," she declares.

She is a cousin of ex-Senator Edward F. Linton, a member of the Greater New York Commission.

HOW HETTY FOILS FORGERS.

Writes on Envelopes That Have Brought Letters to Her.

Hetty Green's idiosyncracies appear as numerous almost as the waves of the sea. New ones are continually coming up. The latest has been discovered out in Chicago, where Mrs. Green occupies, as she does in New York, a permanent place in the records of several civil courts.

That Mrs. Green, like many other well known persons of enormous wealth, is in constant fear of forgers using her precious signature is known to many readers. Her method of fooling the forger is never to sign her own name when it is not absolutely necessary. Her method of giving written orders is positively unique. She uses the addressed portions of envelopes that have brought letters to her. It's a system, too, that cannot be well misunderstood, and is practically safe from the scheming forger if Mrs. Green is only as careful of the letters that she receives as she is said to be of the dollars that she does not spend.

She writes the message on the envelope in the space above the address and makes the address serve as a signature. There is no way of telling if Mrs. Green is the inventor of this odd way of signing a name or not. She has found it an excellent system and sticks to it. It's lucky for her—and economical, too—that she receives numerous letters.

Eczema All Her Life.

Here is another case showing that there are few remedies which cure deep-seated blood diseases. Eczema is one of the most obstinate blood troubles. S. S. S. wipes out completely this disease, as well as all other evidences of impure blood whether obstinate or mild.

There are few men better known all over DeKalb county than Mr. E. D. Jenkins who resides at Lithonia Georgia. He is the owner of a quarry of the celebrated Lithonia granite, which is so extensively used in several States, and is acknowledged to have no superior as a paving stone. His family has lived in DeKalb for forty years and everybody knows them.

"Ever since she was a year old," he said, in a recent interview, "my daughter, Ida, has suffered from Eczema, and I have never heard of a worse case of this dreadful disease. For thirteen years she has been badly broken out all over her body, causing her untold suffering, and frequently rendering her unable to attend school. Her arms and limbs would crack open and bleed, then dry up and scale off by the handful, and at one time an awful sore appeared on her ear, which became severely inflamed and almost dropped off. The disease also broke out on her head and her hair was a continuous mass of scales. Her condition was truly pitiable.

"Of course we have done all we could to relieve her, and have given her almost every known treatment. She has taken potash mixtures and various salves and external applications by the wholesale, and almost every so-called blood remedy, all without the slightest benefit, and year by year we could not feel the slightest encouragement that she would ever be well. I was advised several times to send her to Hot Springs, and also to a celebrated spring in Michigan, and was told that this was the only chance on earth of her ever being cured, as the disease was too aggravated to be checked by medicines.

"A few months ago, someone recommended S. S. S., and as soon as her system had taken on the effects of this medicine, an improvement was noticed. She grew better all the while and continued to improve in every way. We were delighted to see her so much better and for the first time felt that she would get well. The medicine was continued a while longer, and now she is cured sound and well, her skin is clear and pure, and she has been saved from what threatened to blight her life forever. The cure is all the more remarkable because she inherited the disease, which has been in our family for several generations, and I am happy to find in S. S. S. a cure for a diseas which all the specialists in the world fail to cure. I consider S. S. S. a most wonderful remedy, and it certainly has no equal for deep-seated blood diseases which all other remedies do not seem to touch."

This experience is like that of all others who seek relief from the many so-called blood purifiers, only to be discouraged. It is but folly to expect a cure from this dreadful disease by the use of salves, lotions, or any external application. The disease is in the blood, and only a blood remedy can eliminate it. S. S. S. is a real blood remedy, guaranteed purely vegetable, and for real deep-seated blood diseases, has no equal. It cures permanently Scrofula, Tetter, Rheumatism, and all of the many blood diseases. It has made some truly remarkable cures of Cancer, full accounts of which can be had on application; our valuable books on blood and skin diseases will also be sent free to any address. To Such Cometh the Vanity of Kings.

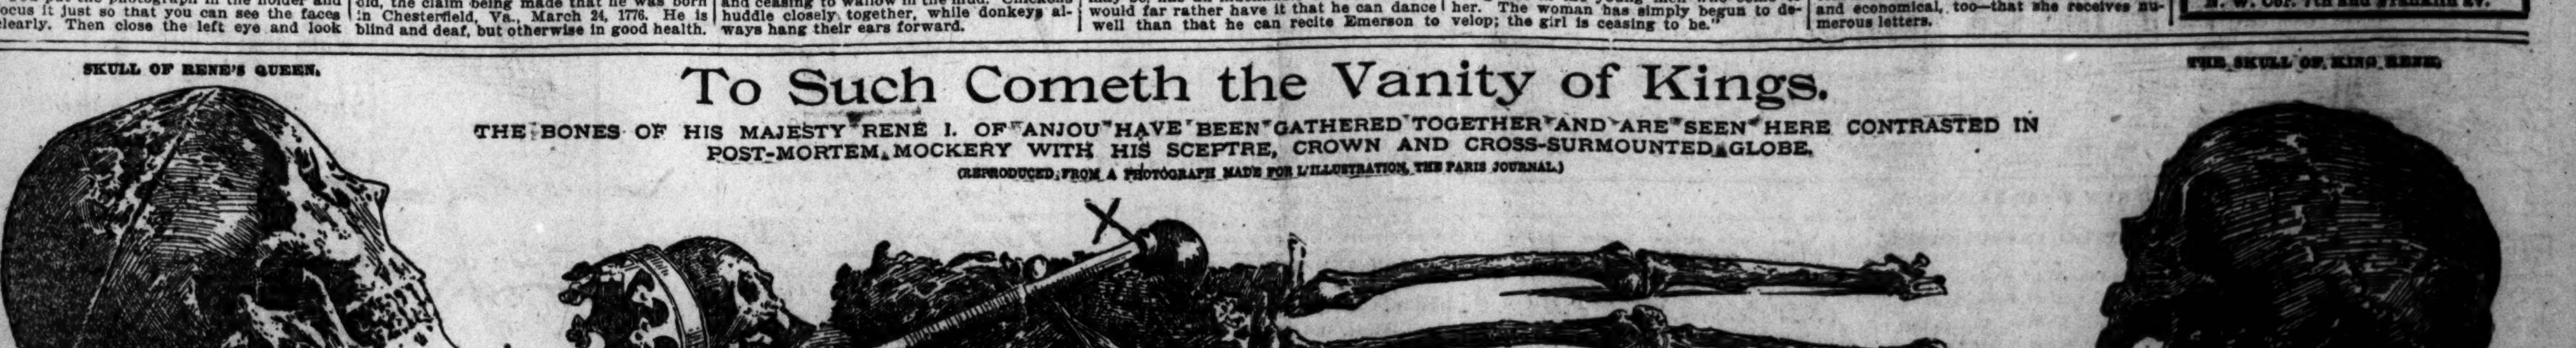
(REPRODUCED FROM A PHOTOGRAPH MADE FOR L'ILLUSTRATION, THE PARIS JOURNAL.)

SKULL OF RENE'S QUEEN.

THE SKULL OF KING RENE.



It does not require the special knowledge of an undertaker to assure you that the flesh of a millionaire or of a prince is just as perishable as the body of the most wretched pauper who is buried in Potter's Field. Neither will a coffin of gold or precious stones save a body from decay.

A dead body dressed in robes or insignia of authority may be an imposing sight, but a skeleton wearing a crown or a dress is a hideous mockery—a reductio ad absurdum of royal pretensions.

The tomb of a king and queen was opened recently in the Cathedral of St. Maurice, Angers, France, and the remains taken out and photographed. The bodies were those of Rene the First, Duke of Anjou, Duke of Lorraine, Count of Provence and King of Sicily and Jerusalem, and of his wife, Isabel of Lorraine. The King died in 1480, twelve years before the discovery of America, and for five hundred years his body lay in a leaden coffin, the crown upon the head and the scepter in the hand, a mute and hidden testimony of the emptiness of pomp.

Rene was very proud of his tomb. He spent the last few years of his life arranging the monument and telling his retainers how he wished to be laid out. Three artists worked upon the tomb, and the King bothered them so much and made them keep such late hours that they all died.

When the King breathed his last the work was not completed. The monument has nearly all crumbled away. It consisted of two marble statues of the King and Queen and three marble knights and three marble ladies weeping over them.

A painting on wood over the tomb, which it was claimed the King himself made, but which it is now thought he did not, represented the King dissolved to a skeleton dropping the scepter from his hands. The tomb in 1769 was moved from the choir to the nave, and in 1793, during the revolution, when kingly emblems suffered, it was almost entirely destroyed. The coffins, however, were not found.

Recently while alterations were being made in the choir the [illegible] of the King and Queen were [illegible] One coffin had in it a small opening through which the crown could be seen and in that way the identity of the occupant was established. In June last the grave was opened again and the coffins taken out in the presence of the Bishop of Angers. The lower extremities of the King crumbled away on being taken out.

Of the royal pair little remained but the skeletons, though there were small pieces of organic matter preserved by the embalming process. Dampness and age had destroyed all traces of the clothing. By the side of the King's head was his crown, in the right hand was the scepter, and in the left the globe and cross. They were all of gilded copper, specially made for the interment, and they were entirely covered with verdigris. At the foot of the coffin was an earthenware vase containing charcoal.

There was still some hair on the King's head, b[illegible] the teeth were nearly all missing. H[illegible] a man of seventy-one when he died. There were still traces of her hair. At the feet were the copper buckles of shoes, long since decayed.

The bodies were transferred to a chapel in the cathedral, and on the following day were deposited in new oak coffins, lined with lead. Copper plates, bearing their names, were placed on the lids, and they were deposited in the grave from which they were taken. An account of the removal of the bodies was placed in a leaden box and buried with the coffin for the information and enlightenment of future vandals.

SUBURBAN BOOM IN REAL ESTATE.

HANDSOME NEW HOUSES SPRINGING UP OUT OF TOWN.

LUCAS AVENUE IMPROVEMENT.

Big Commercial Building to Be Erected at the Corner of Tenth Street at Once.

The revival in the real esate business which was forecast in these columns several weeks ago is being felt in the territory penetrated by the recently built Sarah street and Manchester avenue electric line, an extension of the St. Louis & Suburban Railroad.

Since the building of this line was first projected there has been no diminution in the inquiry for eligible properties of the section of the road, the advent of which has somewhat revolutionized the neighborhoods to which it is contiguous, and given to the values of property a momentum unparalleled in the annals of St. Louis real estate.

Among the places more noticeably affected by this enterprise are Benton, Tuxedo, Maplewood, Richmond Heights, Edgewood, Old Orchard and Webster Groves.

Individual holdings of larger acre tracts, investments of several years ago in anticipation of these developments, are being subdivided and handsomely improved.

They will be thrown open to the public this fall, and will in all probability be sold upon the popular installment plan.

This method of disposition will afford exceptional opportunities for limited amounts of capital unemployed—the future of the property being such as renders it highly promising for speculation.

In the various subdivisions the work of grading, of macadamizing streets and of building sidewalks is progressing apace.

The advent of two trolley systems has given the section the additional advantages of electric lights and Bell telephones, which practically gridiron the districts, while the building of water-works at Meramec Highlands, which will pipe the water of the Meramec River to all of these points, will be an important feature.

These modern conveniences are and will be enjoyed at every point between the city limits and Meramec Highlands.

The prices of these lots in the subdivision, which are guarded by building restrictions and in which the streets and sidewalks have been made, range from $8 to $16 per front foot, while values of acre tracts are under this.

Owners are building on the lots, which have a uniform frontage of 100 feet, a high class of dwellings, they costing from $2,000 to $8,000, and which in most cases are frame.

There are also numerous fine churches and summer houses of a pretentious character and handsome public schools.

At Webster Groves there is in course of erection a Catholic Church which will cost $50,000.

The terminus of this road is at Webster Groves, but it is soon to be extended to Meramec Highlands, the road now being in course of construction.

It is fair to say that this property, right in line with the westward march of civilization, will be included in the city limits which are soon to be extended.

The suburban dealers expect great activity this fall.

WEST END HOTEL ANNEX.

An Important Addition of Twenty Rooms to Be Made at Once.

A most important improvement is about to be made in the West End, which will have the effect of materially brightening up the Vandeventer avenue district.

Architect C. J. Wilhelm, who is in charge of the work, has just completed the plans of a grand annex to the West End Hotel. This annex will be built immediately south of the hotel proper, on an area of 46 feet on Vandeventer avenue, by a rear depth of 49 feet. The style of architecture will be renaissance to correspond with that of the present hotel.

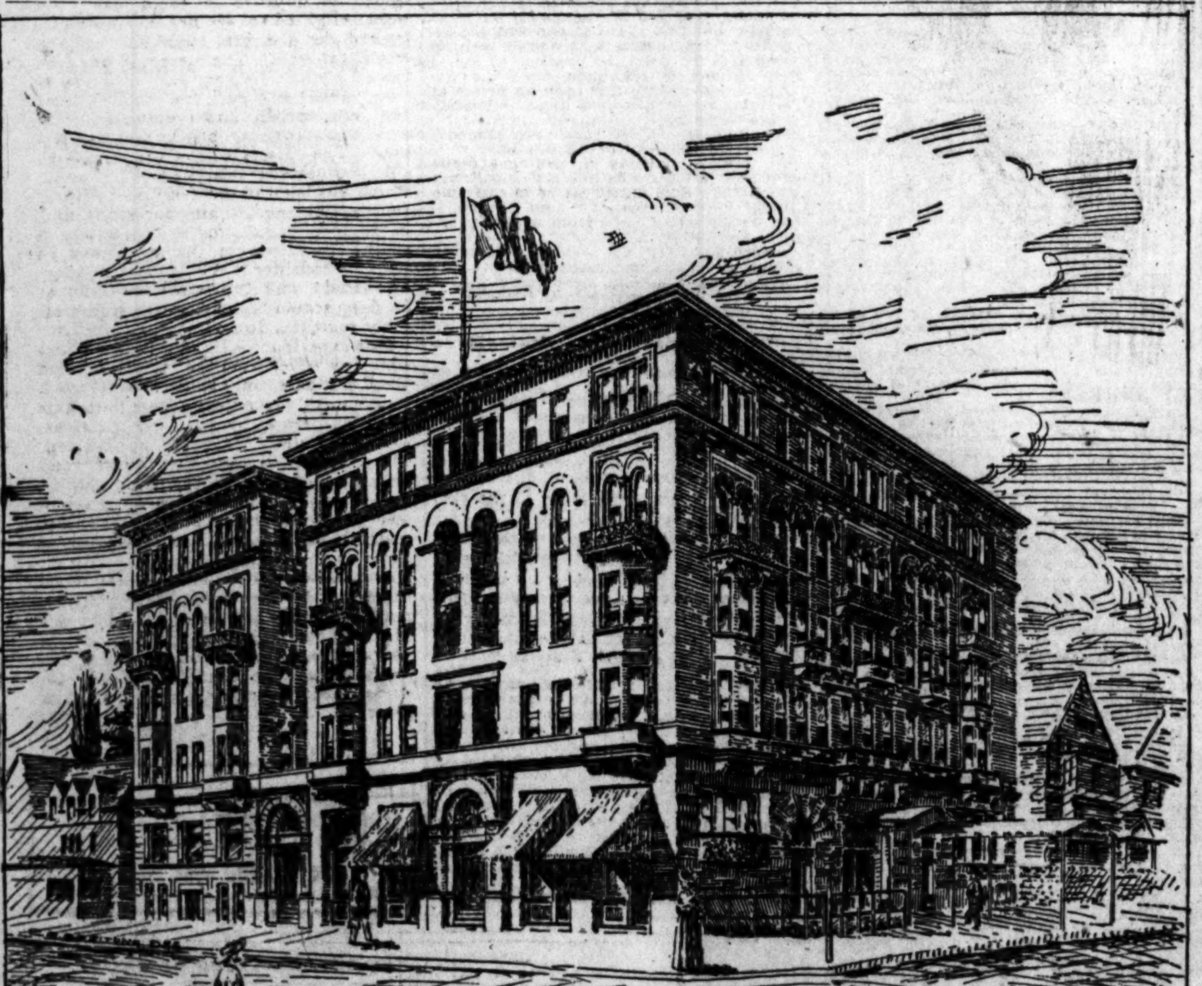
It will be five stories in height, with a finished basement 10 feet high, and will contain 20 rooms. There will be a splendidly fitted cafe, with mosaic floor and marble wainscoting, the Scagliola columns of which will be artistically decorated in oil colors. It will be one of the most magnificent cafes in the country.

Under this will be a billiard room 42x46 feet, with tiled floors and marble wainscoting, while the finish will be in quartered oak. It will be provided with an elegant bar and toilet rooms.

The main entrance will be located between the annex and the main building, which will have an elegant finish in marble tiling and wainscoting and paneled glass ceiling.

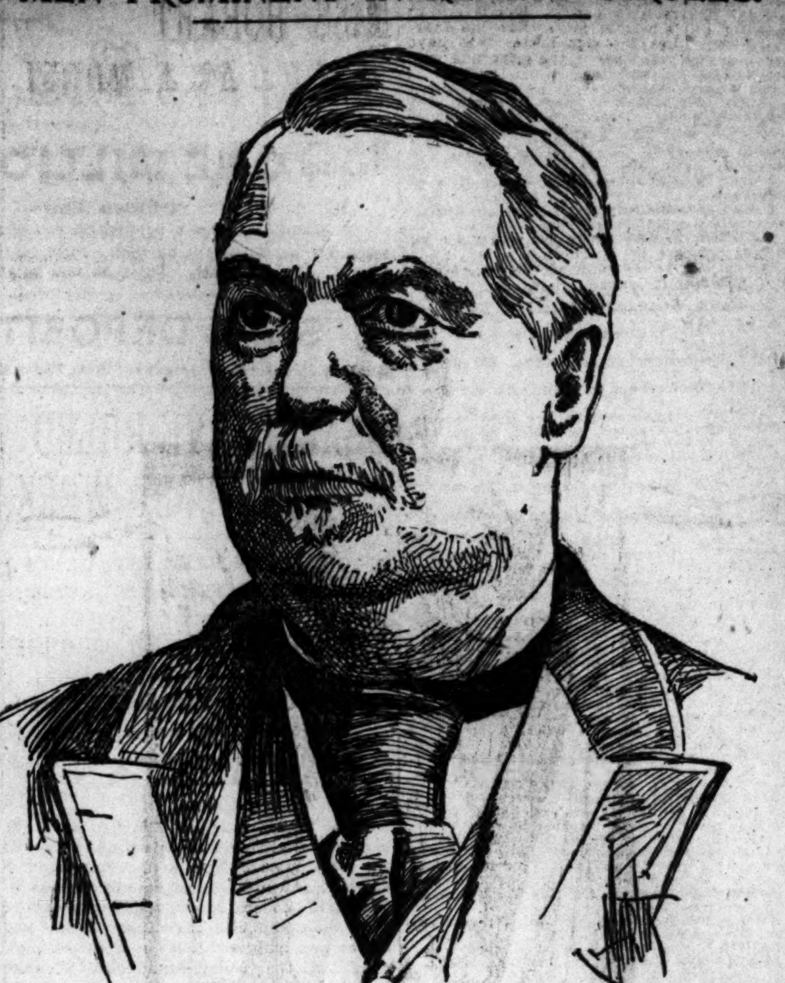
The entire hotel will be strictly fire proof. The floors in all stories will be of granitoid, covered with brussels carpets. Each story will be arranged in suites of three rooms, and will be provided with complete bathrooms, containing sanitary plumbing.

The building will be open from all sides, thereby admitting abundance of light and air. Work has already begun on the addition which is shown on the left of the picture.



THE NEW WEST END HOTEL.

MEN PROMINENT IN REALTY CIRCLES.



JUDGE JOHN H. TERRY.

Judge John H. Terry, of the realty firm of John H. Terry & Sons, was born in the city of New York in 1837. Here he received his education, and graduated as a lawyer. In 1865 he came West, locating in this city, where he practiced his profession until 1880, when he embarked in the real estate business.

He has served in both houses of the Legislature two terms, and was Judge of the Land Court for two terms.

He also served a term as president of the Real Estate Exchange.

He has been associated with some of the largest realty transactions in St. Louis. His agency has one of the largest rent lists in the city, and his personal holdings of St. Louis property are extensive.

NEW SEVEN-STORY PUILDING.

It Will Be for Commercial Purposes on Lucas Avenue.

Architects Kirchner & Kirchner have just completed the plans for a handsome seven-story commercial structure for William Barnard which is to take the place of the antiquated three-story building occupying the northwest corner of Tenth and Lucas avenue.

The building will cover an area of sixty-four feet on Lucas avenue, which will be the facade, by a depth of 105 feet on Tenth street.

It is to be of slow combustion and will be constructed of light colored brick, the trimmings of which will be of pretty stone with great plate glass windows.

The general design will be in harmony with the Martin building at the corner of Tenth street and Washington avenue.

The arrangement will be such as will render it suitable for either one or two concerns. It is said that this building will compare favorably with any of the big structures on Washington avenue. It will cost $50,000. The work of building will be started as soon as the site is displaced of its present improvements. This will indeed be an ornament to Lucas avenue, which is fast becoming a great wholesale street.

HOSPITAL IMPROVEMENTS.

Homoeopaths Will Have a Magnificent Group of Buildings.

Architect J. L. Wees is preparing plans for additions to the Homoeopathic Medical College Hospital of Missouri at Jefferson avenue and Howard street.

The new buildings will consist of a two-story amphitheater with a seating capacity of 200. The lecture room, which will be in direct communication with the hospital, will be well lighted from above, and have waiting rooms on either side. Leading from the street will be private offices and clinic rooms.

Connecting with this building will be the new four-story hospital, to which special attention has been given.

Work will begin as soon as the contracts have been let. When completed they will make a very imposing group of buildings, and will represent an outlay of $50,000.

Auction Sales.

There will be a number of auction sales about the first of August at which some very desirable property will be offered.

Among the sales will be the houses, 3620-26-28 Nebraska avenue. The sale will be held under the auspices of the Aiple & Hemmellmann agency, who have conducted with success so many South Side auctions.

The property is well located in fine and growing locality and will be sold regardless of price.

There has been much improvement in the Mt. Auburn district and the situation at no time has been more promising than at the present. Many new houses have been erected and others are now building. Two electric lines now reach the property. Easton avenue, Hamilton avenue and Cote Brilliante avenue have been improved. Water, sewer and granitoid walks have been laid through the property. The Anderson-Wade Realty Company, who have handled the property, think the situation warrants opening a branch office on the grounds and they have established one in the block of new stores at the corner of Easton and Hamilton, and the agent in charge will give information. Lots will be sold on terms of $10 cash, $10 per month, and choice residences on easy terms. The office will be open to-day.

Tissier, Treasurer, and Thomas A. Rice, Secretary. The Association is now issuing its new series of 500 shares dating from July, 1896. The amendment to by-laws doing away with premium altogether was deferred to regular meeting of August 19.

The Washington Building Association will hold a meeting of all its members on next Wednesday to celebrate the maturing of its first series in 115 months, five months less than the originally estimated term. The announcement has created much interest, and a big attendance of members and strangers, all of whom are welcome, is expected.

EAST ST. LOUIS.

J. T. McCasland & Co. report the rebuilding of the freight depots on the Island in a most substantial manner, such as the case of the Big Four, who are building a brick structure some thousand feet long, with offices for the road, etc., together with the prospects for a handsome new Relay depot to cost considerable money, and, as is understood, to be moved to a new locality. Also, the building of a new City Hall at a cost of something like $100,000, which will be located somewhere east of Eighth street, toward the central portion of the city, and the prospects of an early completion of the street car line between East St. Louis and Belleville, all of which are causing considerable inquiry to be made for real estate in the different localities, and it seems that in spite of the political disturbances, East St. Louis will before many months be in the midst of a real estate boom.

The following are some of the transfers of the week:

H. C. Fairbrother and wife to Paschal Mallet; lot C, block 26, Claremont, $2,200. Andrew Rouge and wife to G. H. Kemper; lots 9 and 10, block 47, Denverside, $600. Louis S. POOL ROOMS COMING AGAIN.

The Law of 1895 Declared Unconstitutional.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 18.—Judge Wofford of the Criminal Court to-day declared unconstitutional the law of 1895, which makes it a crime to bet upon horse races outside of the inclosure about the track. This means that pool rooms will spring up again in Kansas City and other parts of the State like mushrooms. The case was the one against Gambler Biller and others, charged with conducting a pool room and selling pools on races run at the Exposition track. They were arrested under the law of 1895, enacted during a special session of the Legislature. Judge Wofford declared the new law unconstitutional for the reason that it was class legislation, and was not direct in bearing on all of the people. In 1891 there was a law which prohibited betting on races outside of the State and the law of 1895 was to cover races within the State.

IOWA CIGARETTE LAW.

The Test Case Has Become Rather Complicated.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Io., July 18.—The test case of the Iowa cigarette law, in which McGregor of this city is defendant, has become complicated. He was released today on a writ of habeas corpus granted by the Superior Court. The record shows a similar writ issued by the Federal Court in Minnesota and upon a bond in Justice Court on appeal. This gives the Tobacco Trust fighting the case a choice of three methods of procedure—the Federal Court, appeal to the State District and from the Superior Court to the State Supreme. It will be fought to the limit, as it affects the legality of the law prohibiting the sale of cigarettes in the State.

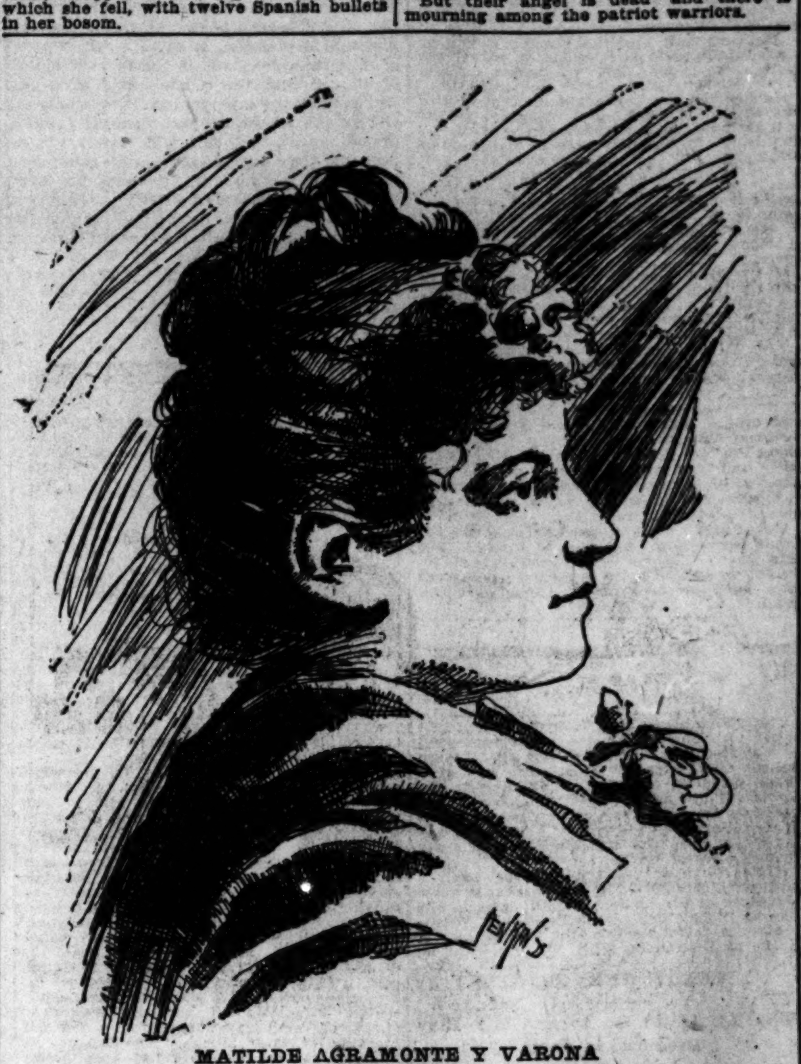
THE CUBAN JOAN OF ARC.

THE "ANGEL OF THE WAR" FALLS DEAD, PIERCED BY TWELVE SPANISH BULLETS.

Angela de la Guerra—the angel of the war—they call her, those brave soldiers of Gomez and Maceo.

Around their campfires they speak of her in whispers now, and with tears. For in a lonely grave among the hills she loved so well, a grave dug deep with the machetes of her fellow-soldiers, lies her fair young form, wrapped in the flag of freedom for which she fell, with twelve Spanish bullets in her bosom.



MATILDE AGRAMONTE Y VARONA

This is Cuba's Joan of Arc, Angela de la Guerra, they call her, killed by Spanish Bullets while Fighting for her country.

And those dark-skinned patriots cross themselves and bare their sunburnt foreheads, and add to their Ave Marias a little whispered prayer to the Angela de la Guerra, asking her intercession for them and for their Cuba. And their eyes flash as the prayer gives way to a curse and a vow of vengeance on the bloody tyrants who slew Matilde Agramonte y Varona.

For Cuba's Joan of Arc is dead. The sad news came in a private letter to a Cuban gentleman now in New York.

This heroine was the daughter of two of the most ancient families in Cuba. For generations the Agramontes and Varonas have owned sugar plantations in different parts of the island. Matilde was born and grew to early womanhood on her father's estate in the province of Puerto Principe.

Gen. Agramonte, her father, was killed in the ten years' war, leading the patriot army into battle.

Through the length and breath of the country Matilde was known and beloved by the simple Cuban peasantry for her kindly gentle character, as well as for her great beauty.

She was a tall and graceful girl, with jet black hair and eyes, and a pure olive complexion that told of the Andalusian blood that filled her veins.

At the outbreak of the present war all of her male relatives bade her a solemn adieu and marched away to join Antonio Maceo's army, leaving Matilde alone on the plantation.

One day, on returning from a visit, she found her property burned and her servants murdered. A troop of Spanish guerillas had ridden across Puerto Principe, leaving a trail of ruin and desolation behind them.

To the camp of Antonio Maceo she rode away, and seeking out her brothers told them that she, too, would bear a sword and fight for Cuba libre. And so she donned the canvas uniform and learned to wield a machete.

Angela de la Guerra, they called her.

A filibustering expedition was landing arms on the coast at Quemados de Guines. Maceo, with a picked escort, was there to receive it. The Spaniards attacked them and Maceo sent a few brave soldiers to hold the enemy in check until the arms were all ashore. Among these devoted men rode Matilde Agramonte y Varona and her brothers.

The fight was fierce against fearful odds. In the thick of the hand-to-hand conflict was Matilde, dealing strokes with her machete.

The Spaniards saw this woman and called upon her to surrender.

"Death first! Cuba libre!" she cried.

Then she fell, pierced by twelve Spanish bullets.

But they had checked the Spaniards. The arms were landed, and Maceo came up and put the enemy to flight.

But their angel is dead and there is mourning among the patriot warriors.

JAY GOULD'S ALLEGED WIDOW.

Mrs. Angell, Who Claims to Have Married Him as a Boy.

Here is a picture of Sarah Ann Angell, the woman who claims to be the late Jay Gould's widow, and to have been his only legal wife. She alleges that she was married to him in New York State on April 16, 1853, when he was known as Jason Gould, and was engaged in land surveying. She says the marriage was performed at Rouse's Point at the head of Lake Champlain, but that her father, enraged at her marrying without his consent, tore up the marriage certificate.

She claims, however, to be able to substantiate the marriage by the clergyman who performed it, and it is said the preacher will testify that he married a Jason Gould to the woman. Whether it was the same who afterwards became a millionaire is another question.

Mrs. Angell says Gould left that neighborhood and she never saw him again. Years afterward she married Angell in Wisconsin. She is now trying to establish by law a dower claim in the Gould estate.

The Goulds deny that their father was ever married to the woman. He was only 17 years in 1853, they say. He married their mother ten years later. During the next thirty years, they point out, he was one of the most prominent men in the country, yet, while he lived, Mrs. Angell never entered a claim against him.

Among the interesting exhibits offered by Mrs. Angell is a receipt signed by "Jason Gould," a facsimile of which is published herewith, which purports to be in the handwriting of the late financier.

HON. ALBERT HEAD

Speaker of Iowa House of Representatives,

Commends Dr. Copeland's Treatment as Able, Skillful and Masterly.

He Speaks From Personal Experience, Having Himself Been Successfully Treated, and Feels It His Duty to Recommend It to All.

The warm public approval of the work being done for the sick by Doctor Copeland is not limited to the people of St. Louis. Hon. Albert Head, of Jefferson, Iowa, Speaker of the House in the 21st General Assembly of Iowa, and formerly President of the Iowa State Bankers' Bank at Des Moines, has recently published a letter warmly commending the Copeland System to the people as providing the best and finest resources in medical science at an expense adapted to the means of all. He had personally attested the treatment himself, and speaks from conscience and conviction. This is his letter:

Hon. Albert Head of Jefferson, Ia., Testifies to Dr. Copeland's Skill in Curing Catarrh.

"My reason for commending the Copeland system is because it provides sufferers of very limited means with the most excellent and admirable treatment that can be secured at any price. This is not a mere impression. I have taken the treatment myself and speak from thorough personal experience. The ailment for which I took the treatment, under the nominal assessment with all medicines free, was a peculiarly stubborn and distressing case of Catarrh. I found the treatment to be worthy of its wide fame—able, skillful and masterly—superior in every sense—and I feel it a duty to commend it to all."

MORE OF THE MARVEL OF CURING THE DEAF.

Fritz Huinng, High Ridge, Mo.: "I am sixty years of age and was growing deafer and deafer, but under the new treatment of Drs. Copeland and Thompson I am perfectly cured."

Mrs. J. W. Littler, 418 N. Vandeventer av.: "For years I did not go to any place of amusement because I could not hear a word, but under the treatment of Drs. Copeland and Thompson I can hear distinctly ordinary conversation."

John Simpson, Moberly, Mo.: "I am 81 years old and could not hear a word said in the Masonic Lodge or at church. Now I can hear even the slightest sounds, thanks to Doctors Copeland and Thompson."

Mrs. Maria Osborn, aged 70, 2221 Randolph st.: "I have been deaf over twenty years and couldn't hear the gongs on the street cars. Under the treatment of Dr. Copeland I can now hear the doorbell and the sermons at church."

Dr. Copeland's Monograph on Deafness will be mailed on application to those directly interested in the cure of this condition.

HOME TREATMENT BY MAIL.

The system of treating patients who live at a distance has been so perfected that with the aid of the Copeland symptom blank and patients' report sheets the percentage of cures by mail or home treatment is fully equal to the number of cures in the office. If you live away from the city write for Home Treatment.

MAN SHOULD LIVE 200 YEARS.

HE MUST LIVE ON FRUIT AND THEN HE WILL NEVER KNOW SICKNESS.

Now everybody who wants to live to be 200 years old step up and hear what the Natural Food Society of London, England, has to say about it.

This newest cult was founded by Drs. Emmett and Helen Densmore, and what it teaches is known as the "Densmorean Theory." Mrs. Densmore contends that if people understood the laws of nature better it would be considered as disreputable to be sick as to be drunk. The Densmoreans claim that man is a frugivorous animal, and that disease and premature death at 80 or so are due to his having made himself carnivorous. They contend that by eating less frequently and then only of fruit, not only could life be prolonged to an average of 200 years, but the beauty and freshness of women would be preserved beyond the present period of extreme old age. A woman would be in the full flush of mature beauty and womanhood at the century mark.

When the new cult has converted the rest of the world to its theories, doctors, druggists and faith healers will find their occupation gone, the breeders of hogs, sheep and cattle will go out of business and big ranches will be turned into orchards and vineyards.

In discussing her theory, Mrs. Densmore said:

"It has been deduced from experiments made on soldiers, and with inmates of public institutions since the formation of our society, that for an average adult performing healthful, but not excessive labor, about twenty-one to twenty-two ounces of dried food in the twenty-four hours are requisite to keep up weight and strength. Of this, nearly seventeen ounces must be carbonceous, or heat-giving; about four ounces nitrogenous, or that which is intended for the support of the muscular action, and less than an ounce of the phosphatic, to support the brain or nervous system, and a small percentage of salts for the bony structure. All of these are found happily combined in fruit.

"If bread be analyzed, after its water has been evaporated, it is found that nearly 70 per cent is composed of starch; and the purpose that this subserves in the system is to keep up the heat of the body. It is well-known to physiologists that while it remains in the condition of starch it is nonabsorbable and nonassimilable by the system. It only becomes food when it is converted by the digestive process first into dextrine and then into glucose.

"If fruit be analyzed, it will be found that a large portion is carbonaceous, like the starch in the bread. In dried figs there is about 68 per cent of glucose, or twice as much as in bread. Dates and bananas are similarly rich in this carbonaceous element.

"When eating bread one must be furnished with some fluid for drink, whereas in grapes, apples, etc., nature provides a distilled water; the fruitarian, therefore, has only to add a small quantity of figs, dates and bananas to obtain all the nourishing elements of a full meal, and to have, in addition, a food rich in health-giving acids and filled with the most wholesome drink known.

"When we add to this the incontestible physiological fact that the heat-giving nourishment which fruit contains is prepared by nature in the form of glucose, ready for assimilation as soon as it is swallowed; whereas, bread, cereals and all starchy vegetables must undergo a protracted and vital force-wasting digestion before their nourishment is converted into this same glucose, we perceive an overwhelming demonstration of the superiority of fruit over cereals as the staff of life."

Mrs. Helen Densmore, in speaking of this country, said:

"I have found the Americans at once the best and the worst eaters. The best because of the lavish prodigality with which their tables are spread. The worst because they eat a lot too much. The quantity as well as the quality of modern food has limited man's life and let loose upon us every disease known to mankind. Breakfast of any kind is a mistake, but American breakfasts are an outrage on common sense.

"A burly John Bull, lately returned from the States, said:

"'In America they serve you three dinners a day; one early in the morning, one at dinner time and one for tea.

"A man should only break his fast when he has a good, honest appetite, and that is rarely until some hours after rising. A failing appetite is a petition from nature for rest. If a man cannot eat the enormous quantities he has been used to he takes pick-me-ups and creates a false appetite. The poor, tired stomach goes bravely to work again under the artificial prop, but collapse is sure to come. All that is needed is an absolute fast until a natural hunger returns.

"The Densmore method it to take but one or two meals a day, and those almost exclusively of fruit."

The society, which has 5,000 members, issues a monthly magazine devoted to propagating its tenets. A late number has an article by Haercticus, the celebrated zoologist, in which he tries to prove that man is naturally frugivorous. He says:

"Animals are classified according to the kind of food that is proper for them. The mammals are, generally speaking, divided into carnivora and herbivora, more strictly speaking, into insectivora, carnivora, herbivora, frugivora and omnivora; and, in order to determine whether any animal species pertains to either class, observations must be directed to three distinctive characteristics peculiar to animals according to the food designed for them by nature. These characteristics are expressed in: First, the teeth; second, the alimentary canal; third, the organs of sense, whereby their proper foods are selected.

"1. The teeth—The carnivora have deficiently developed incisors or cutting teeth, extensively developed canines, moderate molars, and their jaws move only up and down, not sideways. Molars and all other teeth are sharp pointed, the canines or fangs long, to seize their prey and tear its flesh. Herbivora have fully developed incisors, deficient canines and true molars or grinders, with jaws moving sideways, to grind and ruminate their food. The frugivora, with the simian or man-like apes as their prototype, have all their teeth comparatively very evenly developed from the foremost incisors to the last molars, particularly suited to cut and grind succulent fruits and vegetables. To sum up, the teeth of man are unlike those of the carnivora, herbivora and omnivora, but exquisitely similar to those of the frugivora.

"2. The Alimentary Canal—The stomach of flesh eaters is small, and in shape almost globular; that of fruit eaters is larger, and in shape considerably broader; that of the herbivora is very large and very complicated, consisting of several compartments.

"Fruit eaters have, besides, a second stomach or appendix, the duodenum, quite distinct from the digestive organs of either the carnivora or herbivora. Here again the body of man is absolutely that of the frugivora.

"3. The sense of smell and vision instinctively directs the animals to the food natural and proper for them. Beasts of prey, as soon as on the track of some animal, have sparkling eyes. Swift and carefully they follow on the track, and with one bound they fall upon their unwary victim. How different is man. His eyes do not sparkle with blood thirstiness at the sight of bullocks, sheep or pigs.

"The herbivora, guided by smell and vision, pass peacefully and unconcerned by their fellow animals in search of grass as their natural food. Here, again, man, according to his smell and vision, has nothing in common with the carnivora or herbivora, but with the frugivora, inasmuch as the undefiled, undemoralized instinct of man resolutely revolts against killing and against the smell and sight of flesh or blood.

"To man the sight and smell of fruits are a delight and a pride. Every one knows how the very sight of fruits makes one's mouth water, which certainly cannot be said of raw flesh and bones and blood.

"The results of the herbivora, turned into carnivora, are productive of disease, and often fatal. Fruit-eating monkeys, when in confinement and turned into flesh-eaters, will not live long; on the other hand the change of the carnivora to fruit and vegetable eaters is usually singularly favorable, especially in regard to the moral, industrial, artistic, intellectual and spiritual faculties."

The originators of the Natural Food Society claim that by a recurrence of man to his primitive sustenance alone can extreme old age and a life of health and happiness be assured, and they hope to be victorious in their crusade against gastronomical indulgence.

"BREAKS" BY BRITISH EDITORS.

They Have St. Louis Blown to Massachusetts by the Tornado.

England's knowledge of America has been put to a severe test during the past few months. First came the Venezuelan excitement, during the course of which the geographical and political affairs of the United States were strangely mixed up by solemn London newspapers.

Henry Cabot Lodge was declared to sit in the Senate for Nebraska, Senator Bill Chandler was relegated to New Mexico by the London Times, and the Pall Mall Gazette wound up a profound dissertation on the situation by these words: "President Cleveland has now nothing else to do than appeal to the country."

The Cabinet, the Constitution and the Supreme Court were declared by various leading English journals to be the sole hope of preventing war, and the London Chronicle waxed indignant over what it called the American proposition to invade Canada "from Missouri and other adjacent States."

Hardly had the Venezuela excitement died out when the election of delegates to the two national conventions began to again tax English editors' knowledge of our politics and geography. A London evening paper, according to the New York Journal, printed this item: "The Democratic Convention at St. Louis will, it is thought, declare for the coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1." There were only half a dozen blunders in this one sentence, but otherwise it was correct.

But while the English editors were struggling with our political complexities, along came an unexpected event to still further tax their knowledge and prove their undoing. This was the tornado.

The Times, the Chronicle, the Standard and other organs of London wisdom had for several weeks been variously placing St. Louis in various parts of the Mississippi Valley, some declaring that the Republicans and others that the Democrats were there to meet "in caucus." Finally it was decided that St. Louis was on the Mississippi river and was, as one journal stated, "the capital of Missouri," when the tornado struck it and blew the city a distance of nearly fifteen hundred miles.

More than a week elapsed between the St. Louis tornado and its issue of June 5. Yet this grave, serious and dignified London weekly presented to its readers a whole page of alleged pictures of St. Louis over the heading, in bold type:

> TORNADO IN MASSACHUSETTS.
> SCENES AT ST. LOUIS.

The "Scenes at St. Louis" which this paper published have not been recognized by anybody familiar with that city. "High School, Olive Street," is the name of one of these pictures, showing a building in St. Louis which has not been used for school purposes for seven or eight years. "At the Water Works" is the title of another, showing a scene on the Mississippi seven miles from the water works.

"The Elevator" is the title of another picture, although there are at least 20 large elevators at St. Louis. Finally what looks like an old picture of the Capitol at Washington is introduced in the center as "A Scene on Fourth Street."

DICKENS' NERVOUSNESS.

Was Afraid to Go to See His Play Produced in Paris.

Jules Claretie, who has just visited London, has this to say in the Paris Figaro of Charles Dickens and Dickens' play that was produced in Paris:

"I still see him as on a certain summer evening he sat at one of the tables in front of the cafe, which in the Place de la Bourse, was then hard by the Vaudeville Theater, now, alas, demolished—where Sardou had his debut, where Dumas brought out 'La Dame aux Camellias,' where Farguell for twenty years was so dramatic and so fine. The vaudeville of the Place de la Bourse was giving on this particular evening a piece by Charles Dickens, which he had had played in his own house with a few friends, among whom was Wilkie Collins, the author of 'The Woman in White.' In Paris the piece was called 'L'Abime.' Charles Dickens had taken the trip from England to Paris for the express purpose of being present at the representation of his work before the French public. There he sat in front of his table, taking a glass of whisky, while the tout Paris of the first nights was entering the theater, and passing by this man in a gray hat, with the superb head, the long hair and the little twisted tuft of a beard, little imagining that there was in Paris that summer evening one of the master novelists, the most original of writers, one of the geniuses of the nineteenth century. As for him he looked at the people as they entered, but did not go in himself.

"Speaking to a friend, Dickens said: "I am waiting for the first act to be played. Besides, it is so pleasant in Paris in the evening. How can one shut himself up in a theater? The truth is, he was afraid of the result of the evening. He dreaded the Parisian public. It seemed to him that he had become the little unfortunate reporter of former days, the little Boz, but now inimitable. He was seeking a pretext for not facing a French house. This man was afraid of nothing, who managed to finish a piece while talking to the workmen, smeared with coal dust, about pity, about duty, about resignation, about the smiles of babies and about the consolations of the stars, as in Hard Times—this man, who braved the mob, and whose utterances were a charm, trembled before a dozen Parisian critics and a public of Parisian ladies.

"'Come, let us go to Mabile,' said he to his friend. 'I will come back to know the result when the fate of "L'Abime" is sealed.' So there he was finally at Mabile. But in presence of the danseuses, then famous, he thought of nothing else but 'L'Abime,' his ancestors and the Vaudeville. The time drew near when the play must have either triumphed or gone down. Charles Dickens takes a carriage and flings an address to the driver, 'Theatre du Vaudeville, Place de la Bourse,' but between the Champs Elysees and the Place de la Bourse the peculiar fear that agitates the author of 'David Copperfield,' that fear of the Parisian, which is all to the credit of his modesty, increases, and he suddenly exclaims, after having looked at his watch: 'No, cabman, drive to the Northern Railway station; we shall have time to catch the Boulogne train.' And he took it, after having urged his friend to send him a telegram immediately, announcing the result of the representation of 'L'Abime.' It was from Boulogne-sur-Mer that Charles Dickens thanked the successful actors of his piece, players whom he did not know in a French play, that he never saw."

AN UP TURN IN THE PRICE OF GRAIN.

STRONGER MARKETS ARE NOW THE RULE.

LED BY WHEAT AND OATS.

Damage Reports Increasing in Spring Wheat and Oats—Corn Prospects Good—Other Markets.

There are but two conditions now against the long side of wheat. One, the fear of financial depression, is more in the minds of men than real. It is the fear or claim of capital that the remonetizing of silver will precipitate a panic and have a demoralizing effect upon general business. They do not know that this will occur. It is probable they only hope so, and thus confirm their predictions, redound to their credit as prophets and solidify their positions as capitalists, as well as enhancing their wealth. The other is the outcome of the spring wheat crop. So far the demoralizing news sent out by Wall street has had a moderate effect. It has held in check speculation to a certain extent. It could not overcome the strong bullish conditions that have developed in the market, and it has not prevented an advance in price. Yesterday's close of 55⅞c for Aug. and 55⅝@⅞c for Sept. was 2c above last Saturday's close.

• • •

If the spring wheat crop should turn out a sufficient volume to offset the shortage in winter wheat, then it will be difficult to raise values materially above their present level. But the present outlook is for a yield of spring wheat very considerably below that of 1895. If rust could shorten the oat crop yield as decidedly as it undoubtedly has done, then the prospective yield of spring wheat has without doubt been greatly lessened. The weather in the Northwest since the seed was sown and the plant grown has been decidedly adverse. Hot, moist weather has been the rule. The plant has not had the strong root growth that last year gave it such strength as to develop a yield never before exceeded. All the latest reliable returns from the Northwest show a decided deterioration in the crop's condition. The Chicago Herald states that in Minnesota it has dropped from 94 to 80, in North Dakota from 88 to 79 and in South Dakota from 94 to 80.

• • •

The yield of winter wheat on the whole exceeded last year materially, but it was harvested when stocks were almost completely bare, both on the farms and country elevators and in city stocks. The new crop had to at once meet a demand that had no old reserves to call upon. More than that, the country east of the Mississippi, barring a few sections, and those along the eastern boundary of the river in Illinois, had smaller crops than in many years past. The real surplus of winter wheat is only found in a few States west of the Mississippi and probably in Michigan, with a few scattered localities in Illinois and Indiana. There are no stocks of winter wheat at accumulative centers to speak of, and no show for any material increase in their stocks. The scarcity of supplies east of the river has been plainly in evidence of late. Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky and Tennessee mills have been asking for wheat in the West. They have sent orders to St. Louis, where there is no stock to speak of, and have been buying further West. Their own sections appear to be about cleaned out, and their prices which they bid at home, though relatively as high as are paid in St. Louis and in other primary markets, fail to bring them enough to meet their requirements. How the primary markets can expect to compete with such competition as this to fill their depleted stocks is a question.

• • •

European markets, or rather English markets, profess to feel a complete independence and are still doing their cold stand-off act. Banking upon the Government crop reports of this country, which are as unreliable as are its statements regarding the circulation of its currency (both from the made-up statements of Government officials) the foreigners believe they are in the same position regarding the dictatorship for the price of breadstuffs as they have been for years past, and as they have been in finances. A year ago it was claimed they would not draw 100,000,000 bushels from this country in flour and wheat, and probably not over a half to three-fourths of that amount. They had good prospects then for their own crops and Australia, India, the Argentine and Russia had wired crops above an average. Yet with all this the exports from this country in flour and wheat for the crop year ending June 30, last, were equivalent to over 125,000,000 bushels, or only 17,500,000 bushels smaller than same period the preceding season.

• • •

Where their independence comes in now is difficult to see. That prospective immense crop of France has fallen away until it is now below an average. The crop of Russia proves to have been damaged by a late winter, and where that country was exporting 4,500,000 to 5,500,000 bu weekly a few weeks ago, they have dropped to less than half these amounts during the past two weeks. The Argentine surplus is 40 per cent less than last year, which was 15 per cent less than the previous year, and that country is now only sending a beggarly amount—40,000 bu last week—weekly to Europe. India's crop is so short that since the season opened its exports have been less than a third of those for same time a year ago. Australia has to import enough to keep her own requirements up. As for supplies, European stocks, more especially in the United Kingdom, are below the normal, at the nine principal ports on July 1 being only 6,000,000 bu (2,000,000 bu below a year ago), and there is but 22,500,000 bu afloat on ocean, nearly 18,000,000 bu smaller than a year ago.

• • •

Although 567,000 bu wheat was received here this past week, it proved disappointing to the trade. The total exceeded the preceding week by 41,000 bu and the corresponding week last year by 117,000 bu, but when it is considered that the present season is ten days ahead of last year, the past week's receipts do not appear to be so large. The stock so far this week has increased 136,000 bu and now amounts to 587,000 bu, of which 187,000 bu is No. 2 red and 263,000 bu No. 2 hard winter. There was no difficulty in disposing of all that was offered for sale last week. That not taken by millers, and some purchases were made for country mills, was taken by elevator buyers and re-handlers and stocks were kept well cleaned up daily. Yesterday No. 2 red sold by grade at 56@56⅝c, No. 3 red at 52¾@53c, and 47¾c bid for No. 4 winter and 55½c for No. 2 hard winter. On track, No. 2 red sold at 56@56½c, No. 3 red at 53@54¾c and No. 4 winter at 49@50c.

• • •

Fears of damage to the corn crop were allayed by the rain that fell and the cooler temperature, but the strength in wheat and oats prevented any large decline in the corn market. Yesterday's close of 25⅛c bid for Sept. was about ⅛c below the preceding Saturday. The prospects are excellent so far for a fine, large crop, which, if they turn out as promised, will give the country a great deal more corn, together with what is left of the old crop, than can be disposed of, but the present crop is not secured yet, and there is enough demand at the markets to take care of the current offerings for some time to come. An early frost would be a potent bull factor in the market.

• • •

No more corn has arrived here than could be disposed of, though the 234,000 bu received last week was 59,000 bu larger than week before. Exporters were after stock and there was a certain amount wanted by local dealers. The stock in store is only 74,000 bu, of which 43,500 bu is No. 2. Yesterday No. 2 was not worth over 25c and No. 3 was offered at 23c.

• • •

Damage to the oat crop proves to be a great deal more serious than at first it was believed it could be possible. Short crops are now assured in the great oat producing States of the West. The yield in Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska has been cut about in half, in Kansas and Illinois is far below expectations, in the Territories is greatly reduced and in Texas the crop is almost a complete failure. If a crop of 600,000,000 bu is raised this year, considering the very inferior quality of the oats in most sections, it will do well. There has been such a decided cut down in crop prospects that even with the amount of last year's crop carried over the low prices of a week ago are hardly probable the balance of this season. At close of yesterday Aug. was 17⅜c and May offered at 20⅝c.

• • •

There is a shortage of 150,000 to 200,000 bu in July oats, which is causing a good deal of anxiety to those who owe the oats. With only 8,000 bu No. 2 in stock and but little coming in, the prospects for being able to obtain enough of the contract grade to make deliveries is not very bright. Yesterday July sold at 18¼c, and spot No. 2 could have been sold at that also.

• • •

The country is not letting go of their oats, which bears out the statements of crop damage. Receipts at this point last week were only 158,600 bu and the stock here is only 51,000 bu, of which only 8,500 bu is No. 2. Yesterday's sales on track were at 19c, No. 2 white at 19¼c and No. 3 at 17c.

The Daily Commercial Bulletin says of the flour market: Business could be called no more than fair, although a steady trade was reported, both domestic and foreign. The fact that country mills are buying wheat at a lower price than local millers can get it, and with freight rates equal, they naturally put up a competition that cannot be met as long as wagon deliveries of wheat supply the mills at country points. There was some improvement in trade to the southeast, and trade in general with the South was very fair, though little was done in other quarters in the domestic trade. Buyers showed no particular preference for old over new, and quotations are now based on latter. The bookings for export were fully 25,000 sacks, as there was a fair, steady trade all week, most of the stock going to United Kingdom ports. The bids received late in the week were not satisfactory as before. Shipments for week, 34,210 bbls, of which 27,330 South, 4,825 East and 2,055 North and West, against 27,906 last week and 31,332 last year.

Private wire to A. C. Petri.

NEW YORK, July 18.—There is not much of interest to report in to-day's cotton market. The influences previously working for lower prices have been again in the ascendant and a decline of about six points is the result. Liverpool came lower about one point. Our market opened at a decline of from two to three points, improved slightly and then declined again under the weight of offerings, chiefly originating with the bearishly inclined traders. The crop news in the Chronicle while fairly satisfactory is not as roseate as last week. The report of the Agricultural Department of North Carolina published yesterday indicated serious damage from excessive rains in that State. The statistical position as disclosed by the above statement is strong almost beyond precedent, but its normal effect is lost sight of in the uncertainty that springs out of the political crisis through which America is now passing. It is beginning to be borne in upon minds of some merchants, however, that the wisest thing to do under such conditions as prevail at the present is not to exchange real property for money of an uncertain value, but to reserve to operate, buying with all the money they can command real property, the ultimate demand for which is certain. If America should go upon a basis of silver monometallism it is mathematically certain that the currency price of cotton will rapidly appreciate and some people are acting upon this theory. If we elect to go on a gold basis cotton will certainly improve because of the consequent improvement in business. If on the other hand silver inflation is the outcome of election, it is equally true that those who have exchanged money for cotton on the basis of present values will get back much more money when inflation becomes an accomplished fact.

Capt. Bob Young, accompanied by his wife, has gone to the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia for a well-earned rest.

Probabilities favor the small decrease in the visible of wheat, though the Chicago estimate is for an increase. One year ago there was 750,000 bu decrease.

English farmers' deliveries of home-grown wheat this past week were 1[illegible],000 bu at average price of 72½c per bu, against 73¾c the preceding week, 75c corresponding week last year and 73½c two years ago.

Receipts this week of winter wheat at St. Louis, Chicago, Toledo, Detroit, and Kansas City were 2,042,000 bu, against 1,176,000 bu for same week last year and 2,468,000 bu for corresponding week in 1894, when the crop was not near as early as is the present crop.

• • •

Capt. Geo. Baker of the St. Louis Milling Co. has returned from a visit to Europe. He says English buyers will purchase our patents freely at about 20s, but do not want clears at 2s less, as French flour is cheaper and they consider it better value at the price it is obtainable at.

Montreal wires: Reliable expert reports Manitoba crop 12,000,000 to 15,000,000 bu, against 30,000,000 last year, owing to rust, drouth and sowing on stubble. Ontario one-half crop and on reduced acreage. Manitoba crop still deteriorating.

• • •

The New York Financial Chronicle of yesterday says of the statistical position of cotton: Total receipts, 5,198,591 bales; total exports, 4,505,989; net overland movement, 833,800; visible supply, 1,777,540; American, 1,413,340; Southern consumption, 842,000; interior stocks in excess of last year, 55,225; came into sight during week, 12,375; total in sight, 6,929,616; Northern spinners' takings, 1,588,885. Weather reports from the South indicate the weather as a rule has been quite satisfactory during the week. Rain has fallen in most localities and in Texas the crop has been greatly benefited thereby. At a few points in Arkansas and Tennessee rain is needed, but in sections of the Atlantic States and in a portion of Alabama there has been too much moisture. In the earlier districts of Texas picking has been commenced.

• • •

Jamestown, N. D., Alert: In some parts of the Red River Valley, especially in Cass County, wheat fields have been plowed under and more plowing is contemplated. In the James River Valley the grain is looking much better though rust is reported at Sykeston as slowly consuming the wheat. At Montpelier the wheat is rusting and the outlook is not very promising. At Lemert (Foster County) the wheat is badly damaged by rust also. The situation throughout the State is more serious than is generally realized. The lightest crop the Red River Valley has ever had is looked for. Traill County, that will probably average better than any valley county, is not expected to yield half a crop under the most favorable condition—plenty of rain and proper weather conditions.

Tobacco in Connecticut.

In Connecticut it is claimed that there is not a single farmer who does not raise tobacco. He has a small crop, if no more. This he can sell in the leaf for enough to supply himself with such manufactured tobacco as he wants.

BEARS HAVE RULED THE PAST WEEK.

STOCKS HAVE BEEN INFLUENCED DOWNWARD BY MANY CAUSES.

EARNINGS CUT NO FIGURE.

It Was a Market Influenced by Sentiment and Politics and Losses Have Been Heavy.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK July 18.—The Sun says: It is practically useless at this time to discuss the stock market from a financial point of view, and it is almost equally useless to discuss the general financial situation except from the standpoint of politics. People are selling or buying securities on the exchange, not from the usual standpoint of safe returns, but according to their notions as to the result of the presidential election this year. It makes very little difference at this time whether a corporation earned eight per cent on its stock during the last fiscal year and that it may have equally good chances for earning as much next year; the stock of such a corporation may be selling at prices which, in ordinary circumstances would cause it to be accounted cheap, but its price and prospects have little to do with the case. It is simply a question with investors whether the dollars that they put into these securities at this time can be obtained at some future period in dollars containing as many cents.

From the prosaic and perhaps vulgar, but still more or less reliable, standpoint of the doctrine of chances, it would appear that investors are becoming unnecessarily alarmed in regard to the political outlook. In addition to the very severe losses which have been incurred by the holders of securities through the week's decline in prices, the declaration of the Chicago Convention for free coinage of silver has had, and will probably continue to have, a further unfavorable effect. From present indications it will before long become necessary for the Government to make a new issue of bonds to restore the gold balance in the Treasury.

This question is very pertinent at this time, when, as stated before, an issue of bonds by the Government seems to be a matter of more or less imminence. There is no question whatever that the Government can always sell its bonds when such action becomes necessary—at a price. Bonds were sold during the war, when the question was one of the very disruption of the Government itself and the dissolution of the union. In some respects, from the standpoint of an investor in Government bonds, that period and the present time offer some ground for comparison. Accepting the political outlook as exceedingly grave, it must be admitted that from the standpoint of a prospective purchaser of Government securities there is little choice between the two propositions.

Everything is discounted in finance, and it is a fact that at this time the continued depletion of the Treasury gold balance is not only exciting the interest and curiosity as to when a new bond issue will be offered, but the question as to the price at which the bonds could be disposed of is also a point of general discussion. It is unanimously conceded that the Government cannot at this time obtain any such favorable rates as it did upon the occasion of the last four offerings of its bonds.

The stock market has been an active and declining one this week, and the losses in prices have been unusually severe for so short a time. There has been almost no support in the way of outside buying, but the foreign attitude toward the market continues a favorable one. The influences which have dominated the course of prices are of such a character that the market can be discussed only from a purely technical standpoint.

Encouraged by the evident liquidation arising from the uneasiness with regard to the political situation, bear operators have been exceedingly active in the market, and in consequence the declines have extended to a point where many weak accounts were perforce liquidated, thus adding to the weakness of the market.

Outside of politics and the matters enumerated there seems to be little requiring discussion of the situation. Thus far the money market has been altogether undisturbed by the flurry in stocks, although there is less disposition on the part of the money lenders to make long-time loans, which is another evidence of the uneasiness arising from the political uncertainty. Trade reports are almost without exception gloomy, but at the same time railroad earnings appear to be holding up remarkably well. It can only be added that none of these matters carries any influence in a speculation entirely under the control of a sentiment dominated by the political situation, which has over three months of opaque uncertainty through which to pass.

Instead of a bouquet, she carried in her hand a prayer-book bound in white satin. The maid of honor was Miss Agnes Claes and Miss Anna Claes served as bridemaid, both of them sisters of the bride. They were gowned alike in white silk mousseline, over yellow taffeta, with garniture of lace and ribbons the same shade as the silk. In their hands they carried bunches of bridal roses. THE SINGLE TAX.

The Single Tax in France.

(By N. Niles, Belleville, Ill.)

Soon after the middle of the last century the unitaxe, impote unique, was applied to a generalite (county) in France, and applied most successfully for thirteen years.

M. de Turgot, one of the greatest of men, was appointed by the King to the government of Limosin, with kingly or despotic powers, as intendent or viceroy. He immediately proceeded to a reform of the most radical character in the whole system of taxation, lifting all taxes from industry, the products of labor, and taxing nothing but land and removing the exemptions of the clergy and the nobility.

In a word he exacted a single tax and for thirteen years put it in force. The result was a great and striking prosperity in that province, the fame of which caused Turgot to be called by the King, Louis XVI., to take charge of the kingdom. For twenty months he attempted to reform the Government of France as he had done that of a single county, but was compelled by the storm of opposition from the privileged classes, the landlords of France, to resign, with the result that the King soon after perished on the guillotine and the reign of terror and the career of Napoleon put an end to all radical reform in France even up to the present time.—See articles Turgot and Quesnay in the British Encyclopaedia.

I find an interesting reference to Turgot and his attempted reforms in the diplomatic correspondence of our revolution. John Adams, our Minister to France and Holland, had placed a Frenchman, Dumas, in charge of American affairs in the latter country. In his correspondence with our Continental Congress are the two following letters showing how near France once came to the adoption of the single tax:

C. W. F. Dumas to John Jay.

The Hague, March 31, 1786.

Sir: Although I have already had the honor of sending to you, as also to Messrs. Franklin and Robert Morris, copies of the life of M. de Turgot, yet as I have some others on hand which I intend for Congress and the public of America, I send them with my dispatches. I am the editor of the work, the manuscript of which was sent me from Paris in order to have it printed here; a commission which I executed with the utmost pleasure, on account of the importance of the matter, and from a secret presentiment that it will produce good results not only in France but everywhere else. I am with great respect, etc.,

C. W. F. DUMAS.

C. W. F. Dumas to John Jay.

The Hague, March 31, 1787.

Sir: In sending you the last two volumes of the life of Turgot I am happy to remind you that I last summer communicated my presentiment that it would produce a good effect in France. That presentiment is now verified by the proceedings of the Assembly of the Notables in which with the exception of the Jurandes all the plans of the late M. de Turgot are about to be adopted. I am with great respect, etc.,

C. W. F. DUMAS.

A Voice From Pennsylvania.

"No wonder we are rich here in Pennsylvania, the earth is piled up all about." Yes, we have several layers of coal from four to ten feet thick; limestone from two to forty; iron ore, fire clay, sand loam, timber, and a market for it all. Any pole two inches at the butt and fifteen feet long can be sold for cash. I was born over a coal bank. My father bought in 1810, one hundred and fifty acres of land in Allegheny County, at $13 per acre. A hundred acres were cleared and fenced and a house and barn on it. He just paid about the value of these improvements. He did not know there was coal "piled up" under him.

But in 1867 I sold that coal. He never made the coal, nor its value. I know I never did. And the coal, after twenty-nine years, is not dug. It is, as it were, on transit to market yet. You see I sold a special privilege. You had as good a right to it as I had. God created coal for the whole race to use. Therefore, our so-called law or land tenure allowed me to steal. I have no respect for such land tenure.

When I was first married it was in Allegheny County. My girl threw in a coal bank. In ten years I married in Fayette County and my girl threw in a coal bank. Ten years later I married in Westmoreland County and "our pap" has a thousand acres of coal, but I am not so sure about a coal bank being thrown in, for I have been telling the old gentleman and all the rest that it is a steal, that our land tenure is the worst crime the devil ever concocted, for those who "own" the land (the same as owning a hat or house) own those who have to live on land if they live at all, putting the lives of the masses into the hands of the few.

The land question must be settled or we can never have peace. Each person has a right to own themselves. And to own ourselves we must obey the divine plan which we find in natural law; which is, to take the value (royalty) on coal for public expense. It is simply its location value and is public profit or property. It is not confiscation, but it is restoration, restores to the people their own property.

You see, the man who bought "my coal" has not a good title. All I sold him, and all I could sell him, was my power to steal public property. It only takes honesty to see the fraud. A half idiot has wit and gumption enough to see it, also the grand scheme of divinity in providing a fund for public expense by a natural law of civilized community.

Land is defined to include all nature outside of man, and is the passive factor in the production of wealth—good things. And the only other prime factor is labor—man—in this production. Now, God gave to each child born an inalienable right to draw from land its substance.

The only way for that child to always have its right to land is to take for common purposes the rent of all kinds of land.

That leaves to labor the rent of all improvements in and on land, which is the only just distribution of wealth. It is impossible for the kingdom of heaven to be set up on earth any other way, for God does not and cannot deny himself. This natural plan or order marvelously simplifies government.

This plan is the "single tax" plan. We ask nothing more, and will never be satisfied till all of land values is taken for common purposes.

A GREAT YARN.

No Story About Royalty Too Incredulous for Belief Somewhere.

One of the most elaborate newspaper hoaxes ever printed appeared in Paris, and the peculiar thing about it was the large share of credence with which it was received, not only by the Parisians themselves, but by the people of France generally. The story, in brief, says the London Mail, was that the Queen of England had been dead for eighteen years, but that her death had been kept a profound secret, and was known to only a few persons in the British Empire.

The story related with circumstantial detail that Queen Victoria passed away quite suddenly in the fall of 1878, but that for state reasons it was deemed best to keep her demise a profound secret. Accordingly a woman in humble circumstances, of about the same age as the Queen, to whom she bore a striking resemblance, was discovered and installed in the place of the dead sovereign, whose body was secretly buried in a vault beneath one of the royal residences.

The woman who was to impersonate the dead Queen was carefully coached in the part she was to play, and, in order to lessen the risk of detection, it was publicly given out that the sovereign would pass the winter abroad, as she had determined to live in retirement for a number of months. In the seclusion of a little foreign town the impersonator of royalty was most assiduously trained in her part, and, being a woman of wonderful cleverness and discretion, she has been able to continue the deception to this day.

The story was naturally not long in traveling across the English channel to London, where those who heard it regarded the matter as one of the best jokes of the season.

Stopped His Paper.

One of the Chicago lumber trade journals received the following letter the other day from a lumberman in Southwestern Iowa: "Mr. Editor: You will please stop sending me your paper upon receipt of this. I never did think very much of it in any particular, and if I followed your market reports I would have been in the poorhouse long ago. I have been a subscriber to your paper for nearly ten years. Three dollars is a good deal to pay for a paper in such hard times as these, still I guess it's just as good as any of them, and I've been taking it so long I guess I'll try it a while longer. Inclosed please find my check for $3."

NEWS AND GOSSIP FROM THE SUMMER RESORTS.

AT CLIFTON TERRACE.

The Near-by Resort Catches St. Louis Resorters in Large Numbers.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

CLIFTON TERRACE, Ill., July 18.—For the denizens of neighboring hot cities like St. Louis, this is truly a delightful oasis, and a place where one kind of bill, the mosquito's, is never presented. Here, the most agitating question of the day is whether we should go on rowing for the remainder of the evening on the placid waters of the bay or pull for the shore and spend the rest of the evening on the cool verandas, listening to the sweet sounds made by the Philharmonic Orchestra. And on the evenings when dancing is on the programme, this question becomes still more complicated for the young people at the Tavern, whose passion for rowing is equaled only by their love for dancing.

During the morning and the late afternoon hours, bathing, swimming and tobogganing, as well as boating and hill climbing, monopolize the attention of the majority, notwithstanding the delightful afternoon concerts given daily by the Tavern's orchestra.

Among those at the Tavern last year, who have returned for this season, are: Mrs. M. Blue and daughter of St. Louis, Mr. L. A. Moffatt, wife and son of St. Louis; Mr. H. C. Shields of St. Louis, and others.

Mr. Dan Fisher and his mother are settled again for the season in their artistic little cottage by the hill, where many of their friends have been entertained durng the present and past season.

Mr. McCarthy of St. Louis owns a pretty little sailboat of which he makes frequent use.

Messrs. Emmet and James Degnan and C. F. Bailey are fine sailors. They spend their Saturdays and Sundays most delightfully in their fast-sailing yacht, skimming the waters of the bay.

Mr. Bateman, the popular manager at Clifton Terrace, owns a pretty little boat which is named Nellie B., in honor of his wife. Mr. Bateman has become a benedict only since the close of last season, and looks happier than ever.

An enjoyable excursion in the naphtha launch Mary Lee was made on Sunday up to Piasa Bluffs by a party consisting of Mr. and Mrs. C. S. Crane, Misses Mabel Morgan, Meta Knight, Winfred Knight, May Somerville, Edna B. Pilcher, Jessie Crane, and Messrs. H. B. Spencer, W. E. Greeneau, C. D. Eaton, J. P. Binge, Robert Crane, Ralph Crane and Wm. Somerville, Jr.

The annual fishing expedition of a party of St. Louis ticket brokers reached the "Tavern" Monday and remained until Tuesday afternoon. This crowd of pleasure seekers consisted of Messrs. Fred Manget and son, J. M. Stockbridge and son, Simon Steiner and son, R. A. Guinzberg, Herman Overstolz, E. C. Knox and Messrs. A. M. and W. Shubach.

They had a fine time fishing at the upper end of Clifton Bay, and those in Mr. Manget's boat caught a string of fourteen bass and croppie.

Mr. Guinzberg had a pleasant little encounter after dark with an imaginary plank at the dock—result, an unexpected bath in six feet of water.

On Tuesday another fishing party was made up by Mr. and Mrs. John V. McCarthy and Mrs. Donaldson, permanent guests of the hotel. They arose at the peep o' day and rowing up the bay to the mouth of Piasa Creek proceeded to catch a fine string of bass, which were broiled for their breakfast.

Fishing is very good this year and no one prosecutes his search for them more assiduously than Mr. L. A. Moffatt of St. Louis. He frequently discovers them in the bay.

Mr. Moffatt's wife and son will remain at the Tavern all summtr waiting for him to finish his fishing.

Mrs. W. H. Lawson was out here the other day chaperoning the following party of friends: Miss Helen Sells, Mrs. Edith Morrell, W. D. Hudson, O. H. Manhard, M. D., and E. L. Smith. They had an enjoyable time boating, and investigating the beauties of nature in the surrounding valleys and hills.

The late arrivals at the Tavern are: L. Haberlee and wife, E. C. Sullivan and wife, Miss Sullivan, Richard Hawes, R. L. McEwen and wife, G. B. Birch, Miss Mary W. McLain, John V. M. McCarthy and wife, F. D. Goodner and wife, A. B. Bridges, Dr. Leggat, Miss Clarabell Green, Dr. A. C. Robinson, C. R. Jamieson and wife, Wm. M. Morrison and wife, Joseph Degnan, C. T. Bailey, Chas. E. Reid, C. A. Singer, N. M. Gleason, Dr. W. D. Whipple, Dr. S. A. Peake, W. E. Kilburn, Miss Kilburn, U. S. Lloyd, Geo. Urquhart, Miss Urquhart, Frank Ives, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Niedringhaus, Hayward Niedringhaus, Jack Crawford, Mabel Allen, Miss Ella Robinson, J. C. Harrison, C. Sexton, Mrs. A. C. Robinson, Miss Hattie Robinson, Miss Marion Fry and Miss Marie Alexander.

AT PIASA BLUFFS.

A St. Louis Party Carried Too Far and Had to Row Back.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

PIASA BLUFFS, July 18.—At an elevation of 800 feet sheer above the Mississippi River, thirteen miles above Alton, on the highest point of the Piasa Bluffs, the nights are delightfully cool and the July days made comfortable by the fine air and the sweet, refreshing breezes that blow here unobstructed from every point of the compass.

The extensive and beautiful views to be seen from this breezy height have been enjoyed this season by the following persons, who were guests at the hotel at Piasa Bluffs:

From St. Louis—Chas. A. Todd, Miss Georgetta Boswell, C. E. Mooney, H. J. McCane, Mrs. A. L. Porter, Mrs. J. W. Donaldson, B. C. Fenner, Mr. and Mrs. N. M. Drake, G. Kendrick Smith, H. M. S. McEwan and wife, Mary W. Triplett, Cameron M. Davis, E. B. English, L. W. Laughlin and wife, George R. Hogg and wife, M. L. Schmidt, W. R. Colcord and wife, G. W. Garrels and wife, Benjamin J. Quigley, Harvey S. Miller, wife and son, Miss Nora Mahoney, E. L. Horn, M. S. L. Boswell, Miss Ettie Gillim, Allan K. Smith and friend, A. D. Grone, Miss Josephine Grone, Charles and Boswell Drake, Mr. M. F. Boswell and wife, Mrs. Guthrie, Edward Fisher, Mr. A. Einstein, Delos R. Harper and wife, George F. Boswell and family, Miss Helen Washburn, L. E. Andersen and party, W. Brown, L. Isaacs, wife and child, with maid.

From Jerseyville—Miss Elsie Jackson, Mr. V. E. Greathouse, H. H. Bardsley, Jett A. Kirby, Dr. E. H. Eastman, E. Z. English, Miss Bessie Van Horn, Miss Lucy Van Horn, L. M. Cuthing, Van Edgar and wife, Dr. E. Hartman.

From Quincy—J. W. English, E. Bowman English, N. E. Merle.

Among the cottagers at Piasa Bluffs are Chas. E. Drach and Seneca Taylor of St. Louis.

At Mr. Drach's handsome cottage are now stopping Mr. Drach and family, with his married daughter, Mrs. Hertell and her husband, and a party of friends.

A party from St. Louis consisting of G. W. Garrels and wife, W. R. Colcard and wife and Mr. L. Schmidt came up to Piasa Bluffs last Saturday on the steamer Pike, but failing to land at Piasa Station, got off at Grafton, whence they came down in row boats early the next morning. They enjoyed their rowing and acquired fine appetites.

Miss Georgette Boswell has been the belle at Piasa Bluffs this season.

Mr. Fenner of the Sub-Treasury, with Mr. and Mrs. Boswell, made up an enjoyable boating party the other day.

Mr. Allen K. Smith, the present rector of Christ Church Cathedral has been a guest of the hotel since some time last week. He and the choir boys of the Cathedral have been camping in Ames Hollow. This ravine is within sight of the Bluff line cars and affords an animated scene for the passengers on passing trains. Sunday morning the choir boys sang at the church service in Elsah, the little town close by.

AT LAKE MINNETONKA.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

MINNETONKA BEACH, July 16.—The past week has been one of especial social activity, not of the big social events such as a regatta or formal hop bring to the lake, but filled with the smaller social functions which society is bound to keep up in the absence of the larger events.

Bathing has assumed immense popularity. The beaches at all hours swarm with enthusiastic fresh water bathers.

A tour of the lake in the City of St. Louis always invites guests from abroad. This tour gives the tourist of a few days only the best possible conception of the peculiar scenic beauties which the lake offers.

During the past week a large party from St. Louis took this trip, returning in the afternoon enthusiastic over the day's outing.

Mr. and Mrs. Robt. McConnell also made the trip. Taking the boat at Wayzata, they made the round of the lake, stopping at Minnetonka beach for luncheon at the Lafayette. From that point they took the Great Northern for St. Paul.

Mr. Jim Drummond is at the Lafayette for the remainder of the season.

Mrs. C. E. Cleveland came out to the lake during the week. Mrs. Cleveland will spend the summer with her mother, Mrs. E. J. Buxton, at Willow Wood Inn.

Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Becker and the Misses Becker are at Cook's Bay for a few week's outing. Mr. Becker has found the luckiest fishing point on the lake—fish stories are as plentiful as fish.

AT MERAMEC HIGHLANDS.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

MERAMEC HIGHLANDS, July 18.—The patronage at this near-by resort has increased greatly over preceding years. St. Louisans are coming to know and appreciate the fact that there is a resort of high standard that requires no long, tiresome railway journey to get to.

Mr. Festus J. Wade and family, after spending a few days at the Inn, have decided to take a cottage, and have engaged "Hillside" cottage for the remainder of the summer and will take up their new residence there the coming week.

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Bullen and family are to be found the balance of the summer in the beautiful cottage "Rosemont."

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. T. Blaine were among the recent guests of the Inn.

The names of Mr. Howard Benoist and Mr. Louis Benoist Nast appear on the register of the Inn.

Congressman Charles F. Joy and family are occupying "Fairview" cottage. Their cottage stands on the brow of a hill overlooking Grand Canon and the beautiful Meramec River and is just across Grand View avenue from Congressman Seth W. Cobb and family, who occupy "Riverview" cottage.

Miss Adele Bullen, daughter of Mr. Chas. W. Bullen, had recently as guests Mrs. Samuel H. Young, Miss Marie Young, Miss Ida Young, Miss Arline Clark, Miss Marion Scudder and Master Clarence Houser.

Ex-Mayor E. A. Noonan and daughter have been enjoying the cool breezes of Meramec Highlands.

Architect J. L. Wees is one of the many who enjoy the delightful atmosphere of Meramec Highlands.

Mr. A. L. Wolff, the well-known cotton merchant, with his family, have engaged Edgewood cottage, and are now occupying it.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Bakewell and family expect to occupy a cottage during August.

Mr. Amadee B. Cole and family have engaged Elmwood cottage for the remainder of the summer. They moved out Saturday.

Mr. Louis Renard has engaged a cottage for himself and family during the month of August.

A large crowd of the young society folk of Kirkwood and adjacent towns gave a hop at the Inn Friday evening. There were twenty or twenty-five couples, who enjoyed dancing until quite late.

Next Wednesday evening, July 22, the management of the Inn intend giving an informal hop, and should the weather permit a great many St. Louis belles and beaux will be found present.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gordon, child and nurse, have a suit of rooms at the Inn.

Mr. Benjamin Althe:mer has been spending a few days at the Highlands.

AT THOUSAND ISLANDS.

His Royal Nibs, Prince Albert Edward, Will Be a Visitor.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

THOUSAND ISLANDS, N. Y., July 18.—The Thousand Islands' season promises to be rounded in a way that will make this a memorable summer with river resorts. Several very important events are down on the summer programme, and if they come off without a hitch the Thousand Islands will be boosted in a social way that will make Newport and Saratoga secondary satellites in the social firmament of resortdom. For some time there have been whispers and secret comings ond goings that seemed to warrant the inference that something was in the wind—and now it has leaked out.

Society as represented at St. Lawrence summer resorts is on tiptoe of expectation in anticipation of an event booked for next month. The Prince of Wales and his son, the Duke of York, are expected to be Thousand Islands guests about the middle of August. The Prince's coming will not be an official visit, but in the interest of his personal holdings in certain Canadian railway stocks. While this expected visit of royalty has long been known to a few Canadians, it has only just leaked out that the Prince would favor the Thousand Islands summer resorts with his presence. Arrangements have been made for the entertainment of these members of British royalty at the new Thousand Islands hostelry, Ganunoque Inn.

The Pullmans will entertain in a sumptuous manner this season under Mr. and Mrs. Frank O. Lowden's direction. Mr. and Mrs. Lowden will formally open "Castle Rest" next week. It is not at all improbable that an effort will be made to secure the Prince and Duke for a swell "Castle Rest" affair. Whoever secures the royal pair will undoubtedly be counted the leader of river swelldom, hence a sharp struggle may be expected for the royal prize.

Mrs. William Anheuser and Miss Anheuser of St. Louis, and Mrs. D. P. Thomson of Kansas City, are registered at the Hubbard House, Clayton.

These from St. Louis registered at Thousand Islands hotels this week: Mr. and Mrs. John L. Phelps, R. Block, H. Block, S. Block, at the Crossman House.

AT PUT-IN-BAY.

The Resort Has Been Stormed by St. Louis Railroad Officials.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

PUT-IN-BAY ISLAND, Lake Erie, O., July 15.—The last of the party of St. Louisans in attendance at the meeting of the Central Freight Traffic Association departed for their homes last Sunday. They were Mr. and Mrs. D. F. Jennings and Hr. E. W. Braisted. If one may judge of the popularity of departing guests by the size of the farewell group, Mr. and Mrs. Jennings and Mr. Braisted will not soon be forgotten, and a hearty welcome is in store for them on their promised return visit later in the season.

Mr. W. D. Holliday of the Big Four, and C. E. Gibbs of the Vandalia, did not tarry quite as long, but manifest the same St. Louis characteristic of "making friends."

Mrs. Cox and family are still guests of the Victory, and it is observed that a recent acquisition to the party came in the pleasing form of a Tennessee gentleman, an M. D. by profession, and registered not a thousand miles from Union City. Possibly he is interested in the brother.

Mrs. E. N. Schoenborn is here for a short time.

AT NEWPORT.

The Duke and Duchess of Marlborough Have Decided Not to Go There.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

NEWPORT, R. I., July 18.—Newport has been all gayety this week, the summer residents making the most of the extremely warm weather by morning surf baths, afternoon golf, bicycling, driving, luncheons and picnics, and evening dinner parties and hops. Summer life has fully assumed its old-time aspect.

The gossips have had much to talk about, for Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont has brought what to them was disappointing information, the statement that the Duke and Duchess of Marlborough would not visit this resort this season. Elaborate plans for their entertainment had already been made, but they have had to be set aside.

Mr. and Mrs. Potter Palmer of Chicago will be among the most lavish of entertainers this season, having a house full of guests nearly all the time, and frequent lunches and dinner companies, and one or two receptions, and perhaps a ball. Mrs. Julia Dent Grant and Mrs. Nellie Grant Sartoris will be of Mrs. Palmer's house party, Mrs. Grant remaining most of the summer with her. It is understood that Mrs. Calvin S. Brice is to give a large reception in honor of Mrs. Palmer as a sort of introduction to Newport society.

Among the notable arrivals of the week were William K. Vanderbilt and Count Hadik, the latter a dashing young Hungarian nobleman, who has been quite a social sensation here during the last two seasons, partly because of his generous expenditure of money and partly for the reason that he is one of the most marriageable of titled foreigners at present in this country. He will be one of the social lions of the season.

AT ASBURY PARK.

The St. Louis Colony This Season Is a Large One.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., July 16.—The attention of the Western people at this resort has been about equally divided between sea bathing, the hops at the hotels and a sealion which "Founder" Bradley has put into a tank on the fishing pier. The lion, otherwise called a seadog, affords lots of fun for the children and Senator Bradley, who owns the entire beach here, takes pleasure in catering to them.

Over in Ocean Grove the annual session of the Chautauqua Assembly has just closed. All the available vocalists there are being trained as a chorus to assist Walter Damrosch and the New York Symphony Society and the New York Oratorio Society in rendering "The Creation" and "The Messiah" August 12 and 14. This musical festival last season drew 30,000 people. Special trains were run from New York and Philadelphia. Ocean Grove never saw such a throng—not even on "Camp-meeting Sunday." The new auditorium is a superb place for giving the oratorios. Mr. Damrosch thinks there is no better in the country. It seats 10,000 persons.

Nicely domiciled at the Victoria is W. P. Coleman. He is a loyal St. Louis citizen, but likes Asbury Park for the summer season.

His family is with him for the summer.

IN THE SWELLDOM OF MAINE.

St. Louis People in Touch With Nobility at Bar Harbor.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

BAR HARBOR, Me., July 18.—It is the flowing tide here now, bringing on the crest of its wave an influx of summer visitors. Nearly all the cottagers are here, and a large part of the hotel contingent.

The diversions of the day are riding, driving, sailing, cycling and golf. Herbert Leeds, who was instrumental in establishing the golf links at the Kebo Valley Club, has arrived. The bunkers on the links have been put into excellent condition since last year, and the grounds materially improved and cleared away, so that the space is twice that of last year, and there is talk of extending it still further, taking in the foothills of Kebo Mountain. Among the enthusiastic players are Edmund Pendleton, Shirley Goddard and the Messrs. Robbins and Misses Coles, Hinkle, Mitchell and Seely. It is a very picturesque scene when the merry golfers, in their unique costumes, are grouped about the Kebo grounds.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Damrosch have arrived at "Stanwood," where they will spend the summer with Mrs. Blaine. Mrs. Emmons Blaine is also among the late arrivals, she having taken for the summer the William Tod Helmuth cottage "Steepways," close beside the beautiful home of R. H. McCormick of Chicago, a cousin of Mrs. Blaine.

Dr. and Mrs. S. Weir Mitchell and their fair daughter have arrived for the season, and are at the Far Niente.

M. A. Grip, the Swedish Minister, is again a resident for the season, having taken the Glover cottage.

Prince Raoul Wrede of the Austrian Legation is a guest at the Marlborough.

Herman Sheldon of St. Louis is registered this week at the Rodick.

Mrs. Mackey of St. Louis is at Poland Springs for a few weeks.

Mrs. M. A. Reed and family of St. Louis are visiting at Bath.

William B. Potter and family of St. Louis are at the Yorkshire Inn, York Harbor.

AT COLORADO SPRINGS.

A City of 18,000 People, All of Whom Must Drink Water.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo., July 14.—Old residents of St. Louis will remember the black cap Sisters of Charity who lived their quiet holy lives, doing good here, many years ago. There are none of them there now, but old-timers will remember them well. The order still exists in Colorado, and their presence here reminds old St. Louisans of years gone by.

Less than eight years ago came Mr. and Mrs. Glockner from Ohio—the latter in search of health. Here he died, and his grief-stricken widow erected to his memory the Sanitarium to-day bearing his name, and presented it to the Sisters of Charity. The black cap Sisters took charge of it and still control it.

From the window of the Glockner, Pike's Peak, crowned with snow, looms up 14,147 feet above. Within half an hour's ride on the electric cars are the wonders and beauties of Cheyenne Canon, the Garden of the Gods, the Springs of Manitou, with all their picturesque and marvelous surroundings. The city of Colorado Springs, with an elevation of 6,000 feet, lies like a vast plateau inclosed on all sides by the Rockies and foot hills. Its climate is free alike from the exhausting heats of summer and the excessive cold of winter. The extreme dryness of the air, the large proportion of completely sunny days, the porous character of the soil are qualities which Colorado Springs possesses, all in one. There are beautiful parks, handsome public buildings and palatial residences. The drive from the station to the Glockner, through Cascade avenue, reminds one of Lindell boulevard in St. Louis. There is a population of 18,000 people, and to their credit it may be added not a liquor saloon in the entire city.

There are many invalids here who are simply here for their health. The influx of visitors who make this a resort is only just setting in, but they will soon come and as usual St. Louis will be well represented.

AT SARATOGA SPRINGS.

Nominee Bryan Is Expected to Deliver a Speech There.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

SARATOGA SPRINGS, July 16.—The Daughters of the Revolution, who enlivened the town in a moderate degree last week, and the latter part of the week before, have gone, and Saratoga has now under serious consideration the season of '96.

Among the interesting people who were here last week were Mr. and Mrs. Russell Sage, who came up from New York on Saturday to rest a few days.

The Jeffersonian Democratic Club and the leading Democrats of the village will extend an invitation to Nominee Wm. J. Bryan to make a speech in Convention Hall shortly after the ratification meeting that will be held soon in New York.

The element of Southern visitors here this year promises to be larger than for some years back. Prominent among those already comfortably located here are: Mr. J. G. Chapman, Mr. and Mrs. Max Schwab, Mr. W. A. Sawyer, Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Sutton, at the United States Hotel; Mr. Jacob Mahler and family, Mr. Jacob Frank, at Congress Hall, all of St. Louis.

Louisiana is represented at the Grand Union by Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Jeffries. Mr. Jeffries has just returned from Chicago, where he was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention.

Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Anson of Louisville, Ky., are at Congress Hall.

Mr. Lycurgus Laflin of Chicago is again at the Grand Union, where it has been his habit to make and keep things lively every summer for the last eight or ten years.

AT NANTUCKET.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

NANTUCKET, Mass., July 16.—Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, the only prominent politician down here, is the guest of Dr. W. S. Bigelow at the little island of Tuckermuck.

Mr. Moses Rumsey of St. Louis with his niece, Miss Warren, arrived here this week and joined his family at Siasconset.

Among the Western arrivals may be mentioned: Mrs. H. H. Button, Miss P. A. Pearson, Miss Louise M. Green of Milwaukee, D. R. Bowles of Kansas City, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Stewart of Iowa City, Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Edwards of Detroit, who are guests at the Springfield; F. G. Stewart, Augustus V. Harvey of St. Louis; A. H. Hopkins, Minneapolis, Wm. S. Forrest and wife, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Broughton at Hotel Nantucket.

Mr. H. Botsford, H. McCartney and wife, Mrs. C. L. Dakin, A. L. Penhallow of Chicago, Mrs. A. Perry of Indianapolis at Sea Cliff Inn.

Mrs. J. S. Greenleaf and daughter of Kansas City at Ocean House.

AT AVON-BY-THE-SEA.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

AVON-BY-THE-SEA, N. J., July 16.—The beauties and advantages of Avon-by-the-Sea having been discovered and enjoyed by the families of Mr. Wm. H. Thompson, President of the Bank of Commerce, St. Louis, and the late Daniel B. Clark, for the past ten years. Their number has this year been augmented by many more from St. Louis, among whom are Mr. and Mrs. D. H. Holmes, Miss Lottie Holmes, Miss Mabel Holmes, Mrs. Agnes Elliott, Miss Bessie Elliott, Mrs. H. Elliott, Jr., Miss Fairbank, Miss E. Mitchell and Miss G. A. Mitchell, all of whom are at the Avon House.

The bathing is excellent, as is evidenced by the regularity with which Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, the Holmes family, and the others above named, can be daily seen enjoying the breakers.

Mr. Thompson has about the finest and most substantial cottage at Avon, situated close to the sea.

AT OCONOMOWOC.

Yachting as an Amusement Takes Turn About With the Hay Ride.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

OCONOMOWOC, July 17.—The hayride season has arrived. Probably that announcement is less thrilling to St. Louisans generally than to the habitues of Wisconsin summer resorts.

Miss Alice Morton of the Mound City was recently a guest at the summer residence of E. C. Simmons of St. Louis.

Mrs. S. J. Taylor of St. Louis is among recent arrivals at Draper Hall.

A. F. Smith of Cripple Creek is registered at the Hotel Chicago.

H. H. Kohlsaat of the Chicago Times-Herald, and Mrs. Kohlsaat, are guests at the Swiss cottage of Commodore Ferdinand W. Peck, on Lac la Belle.

Ex-Gov. E. O. Stanard and family of St. Louis are among the late arrivals at Draper Hall, where they will spend the balance of the season. They have been here in former seasons, and are familiar with the summer delights of this lake region.

A. J. Ross and Martin Murray represent Louisville, Ky., at the Jones House.

D. B. Robinson of the Santa Fe Railway and family occupy the same cottage in which they spent last summer on Lac la Belle.

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Tilton of St. Louis are guests at Draper Hall.

Wm. Penn Nixon of the Chicago Inter-Ocean is a guest at the Greek villa of Clarence I. Peck on Lac la Belle.

Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Ferguson of the Mound City recently registered at Draper Hall.

Wm. F. Huse of St. Louis has abandoned the project of exhausting the fish in the forty lakes, even with the assistance of his host and townsman, E. C. Simmons, and, with Mrs. Huse, has returned to the Mound City loaded with veracious fish stories.

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Perry of Memphis recently registered at Draper Hall.

Hugh McK. Jones of the Mound City is enjoying summer delights and necessarily studying the mysteries of yachting, as he is the guest of Geo. W. Simmons of St. Louis at the summer residence of E. C. Simmons.

Harry G. Brookings helped represent St. Louis in Chicago Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Lamley of Quincy, Ill., are among the arrivals at the Jones House.

Kansas City is represented at Draper Hall by Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Slaners.

T. J. Brownlee of St. Louis is registered at the Hotel Chicago.

The Yumpin Yaper, the featherweight sloop of Edw. H. Simmons of St. Louis, which was transferred from Lac la Belle to Lake Oconomowoc and was second in last Saturday's regatta on the later waters, was a complete surprise to the yachtsmen on that lake. Her extreme lightness renders transfer from lake to lake easy, and she is likely to be in events on Pine Lake also, as George W. Simmons, who sails her, has recently become a member of the club on that lake, as well as on Lake Oconomowoc. He has long been a member of the veteran organizatoin on Lac la Belle and is on its Executive and Regatta Committees.

AT LONG BRANCH.

The Annual Bicycle Parade Eclipsed All Former Efforts.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

LONG BRANCH, N. J., July 16.—This was bicycle day at this resort, it being the occasion of the annual bicycle parade. The summer capital was at the mercy of cyclers.

The demonstration to-day eclipsed anything of the kind ever held at an American summer resort. Cycles and cyclers of all kinds took part in the big pageant. The scene was a most inspiring one.

The next attraction of social moment will be the open air horse show at Hollywood Park the second week in August.

The opening ball of the season was celebrated at the Elberon Hotel Wednesday evening. Abner McKinley, brother of Maj. McKinley, and Mr. and Mrs. R. T. McDonald of Fort Wayne were guests of honor.

The guests at the Brighton held a progressive heart party in the parlor Wednesday evening. Fifty took part in the games.

Miss Hunt of St. Louis is a much admired guest at the United States.

Morris L. Betteman, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Ach, Lawrence and Samuel Ach of Cincinnati are late arrivals at the West End.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Phillips and Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Kerkman are a party of Chicagoans registered at the West End.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Lesem and family of Quincy, Ill., are enjoying the season's comforts at the West End.

Thomas T. Jones, a well-known Kentuckian, is a guest at the Scarboro.

M. A. Singer of St. Louis is spending the season at the Hawland.

J. F. Clark of Cleveland, O., is a sojourner at the Brighton.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Shud, W. H. Tallman and Miss Ella Tallman of Chicago are comfortably ensconced at the States for the season.

A. T. Townsend of Lexington, Ky., is a prominent Westerner registered at the States.

AT OLD POINT COMFORT.

The White Squadron Will Shortly Arrive and Will Enhance the Gaiety.

Special Correspondence of the Post-Dispatch.

OLD POINT COMFORT, Va., July 16.—It's a merry life we're leading at Old Point nowadays and it is universally remarked that there never was a better class of people under the roof of the Hygeia. The Virginia Bar Association furnishes many bright lights and the representatives of the State are indeed brilliant men.

To-night occurs the annual banquet at the Hygeia, which will be a feast of wit and flow of soul.

To-day the Woman's Press Club of Atlanta held a meeting here.

Hundreds of Christian Endeavorers are at Old Point, the little leaven which leaveneth the lump of worldliness to be found at all pleasure resorts.

Hon. D. Gardner Tyler and wife are at the Hygeia.

The arrival of the White Squadron within a short time, bids fair to make Old Point the gayest resort on the coast for months to come, as the ships will harbor in Hampton Roads, off and on, all the fall and winter. There will be nine ships in the fleet.

Dr. Pettis, United States Marine Surgeon, has located with his family on a houseboat a short distance from the hotel.

THE HONEYMOON.

(Scene: Any hotel at this season.)

"Ootsy, tootsy, wootsy, woo;
Does I love 'oo? 'Es I do—
Loves 'oo wis my drate big heart,
Loves 'oo till death does us part;
Loves 'oo sad and loves 'oo bright,

A LISTENER'S THOUGHTS.

"For God's sake, kiss him, kiss him quick!
Or I will kick him, kick him, kick;
I'm getting very, very sick,
And oh, I long to kick, to kick.

Lady Burton's Peculiar Will.

Lady Burton, who recently died in England, left a will which was a curious document. She directed that her heart should be pierced with a needle in the hands of a physician, after which the body was to be embalmed. It will rest in a tent beside her husband, unless a revolution occurs, which might result in the desecration of the dead, in which event the two bodies are to be placed in a vault already purchased.

ST. LOUIS, SUNDAY MORNING, JULY 19, 1896.

WHERE THE "BOSS CANNER" KEEPS THE GROWLER GOING.

He Keeps the Peace if He Has to Take a Club to Do It.

A Study of the Hobo as He Is on His Native Heath.

Canning "Joints" in the Levee District, of Which Decent Citizens Can Form No Adequate Conception.

"I am duh autocratic gent wot runs dis cannin' hole.
On peace 'n' order I am bent wit' all me heart 'n' soul.
I'm 'ployed tuh keep dis gang in line, an' you can bet yer neck
Unless dey heeds dis voice o' mine dere'll be a nawful wreck."

THE CANNER IN HIS GLORY—"ALL JOIN IN THE CHORUS."

Some sweet day, when the great descriptive writer of the century shall have been born, matured and trained, with one of those trenchant pens that cut to the bone, depicting men and things as they are but "hadn't ought to be," wallowing in the accumulated filth of years and burrowing in the depths of degredation, the keen scent of genius may lead him to St. Louis and eventually to Third and Valentine streets.

There, buried in the hearts of beings that claim to be human, but whose exteriors proclaim them to be brutish, stained with dishonor and frequently by crime, he will read a story more terrible, more revolting than any told by Dickens, and one that should cause the heart of humanity to ache.

In the vile dens around that corner and in that vicinity between Third and the river are the haunts of men as desperate as Bill Sikes and as degraded as it is possible for human beings to become without losing every semblance of sentiment and thought and those other emotions which distinguish man as an ethical being.

If the men are degraded, what shall be said of the women?

If the men are beasts, what term can be used to express the condition of the miserable female wrecks whose dwellings line the narrow streets near the river?

"Westward" seems to be the motto of the human race, but in St. Louis, at least, the lower a woman becomes the nearer to the river she drifts.

To the logical end of her class is but another step.

Then ho for the Morgue!

The life of the "hobo," considered from a pictorial and material standpoint, is interesting.

It is pre-eminently a life of ease. Not a life of comfort, nor yet of pleasure exactly, but still a life of ease, as far as thought is concerned; and is not thought the bane of human existence.

It requires no lotus leaf to bring him repose nor is the Chinaman's "dope" essential to his happiness. If a black-eyed houri and a glass of lemonade form a Persian's heaven, as has been said, it is equally true that a beer can and five cents make a paradise for the St. Louis "hobo."

It was this fact which gave rise to the establishment of those unique institutions known as "canning joints," which form a distinctive feature of life near the river, especially in that district bounded by Third street and the Levee, Clark avenue and Plum street.

A "canning joint" is unlike any other institution in the world.

The first requisite is a bar, and this is usually conducted in connection with a grocery store. The bar, though small, invariably flourishes, and one of them, on Clark avenue, east of Third street, bears the significant name, "The Gold Mine."

The biggest feature about a saloon of this class is the "can room." Sometimes it is a room, sometimes a large open courtyard in the rear, but whether inclosed or not the title is the same.

Each place is provided with plenty of chairs and benches, and there is standing room sufficient to accommodate a hundred men.

The walls are absolutely bare, save for the decorations left by countless generations of flies. The floor is sprinkled with sawdust, which is allowed to remain for weeks at a time, and when the room is deserted by the sated gang millions of insects swarm in to suck from the sawdust the moisture accumulating from the foam blown by fetid breaths from the several hundred "growlers" consumed during the day.

The malodorous atmosphere can be compared to nothing but that of a slaughter-house.

INTERIOR OF FUCHS' BAR.

Through windows that have not been washed for years the heavy sunlight outside struggles through in a discouraged sort of way, disclosing the outlines of drunken "hobos" lying in heaps in the corners and along the walls, dead to the world and unmindful of the myriads of flies which battle for the privilege of drinking the intoxicating moisture from their bearded lips.

Faintly glowing in the midst of this squalor, perched on a chair in the middle of the room, like the great tureen that was the center of attraction on the tables of the Dutch in colonial days, is the "growler."

It is the one thing in the room that is kept clean, and that is not because of device, but of constant handling and friction.

It is held as gingerly by the thirsty "hobos" as a sacramental cup at a church communion service, and its days have been long in the land.

The edges are worn smooth and the sides are sleek and shining. The men who drink from it may be battered, but not the can.

Even in a country where tin buckets are cheap this precious vessel is considered almost

"Too bright, too good
For human nature's daily food."

Even as Brutus loved Rome, even as the Chinaman loves his pipe, the Arabian his horse and the modern maid her bicycle, so the "hobo" loves his can.

Morality, honor, friends and even his daily bread may pass unheeded, but the can is sacred.

"I am duh boss. I've got control
At Fuchs's, rain or shine.
Duh gang all knows me, an' duh whole
Durn shootin' match is mine.
No funny bizness goes wit' me.
I hol' duh club, b'gosh,
Fer I'm duh foremos' canner. See!
An' I won' stan' no josh."

The typical "canning joint" in St. Louis may be found at Third and Valentine.

It is conducted by August Fuchs and his wife, and the police give it the name of being the most popular, and therefore most dangerous, resort of its kind in the city.

Three murders have been committed there inside of a year.

It is located in a low, dingy, two-story brick building, the second story of which is used by Fuchs as a residence.

On the first floor, fronting on Third street, is a diminutive grocery store.

In the rear, opening on Valentine street, is a small bar-room.

Still further in the rear are the "can rooms," for Fuchs' boasts of two.

The first is a court-yard, paved with brick and completely surrounded by brick walls.

Near the entrance is a wooden stairway with a railing, and along the western wall is a long wooden bench. In the remainder of the yard is "standing room only."

East of this yard is the "can-room" proper, and in the rear of that, at the north, is the abode of Fuchs' female boarders.

In the "can room" is a stove on which the "canners" are allowed to cook whatever food they may bring with them.

Any unsophisticated and therefore incredulous citizens who desires to see how "the other half" lives should visit this resort some afternoon between 3 and 6 o'clock.

That is the best time, for during those hours the "hobo" thirst is greatest and the "boss canner" has his busiest season.

The daily programme of the "hobo" never varies. In the morning he arises, like Aurora, from his couch, usually a lumber pile on the levee, and sallies forth in search of a nickel—perchance, oh, happy thought! a dime.

Being a "hobo," he adopts what seems to be the easiest method of procuring it, and begs on the highway.

Sometimes he alights on a "good thing" in the shape of a stranger, and bores a quarter out of him, to say nothing of numerous beers provided by the "angel," whose heart has been touched by a tale of woe.

THE BOSS CANNER.

If necessary the "hobo" will take advantage of an unsuspecting wayfarer and hold him up, and sometimes, in a fit of desperation or temporary aberration, he will work.

The one end of his life, as bounded by days, is to secure money, for money he must have to drink, and drink he must have.

The probabilities are that the husky beggar who holds you up for a 5-cent piece at Seventh and Locust streets will "blow himself" with your hard-earned coin in one of the several "can rooms" further down town, of whose existence you have known nothing.

About 3 o'clock every afternoon the clans commence to congregate.

They come singly, in pairs and in droves but they all get there, and woe to the unlucky wearer of pants who may have failed in his morning rounds to collar a nickel!

He must drink upon the favor of the more fortunate, and his lot is a hard one, for heeltaps are unknown to the members of the Beer Canners' Club.

Everything is informal at these daily meets. First one member "springs himself" for a can and then another, and the "growler" is kept going constantly until the whole crowd is penniless and drunk. Then they are ready for rapine, robbery and even murder.

So thickly do they congregate that it is almost impossible for a policeman to force a passage through the crowd in case of necessity.

Every day a hundred men are gathered into a room that would not comfortably seat twenty.

Laughter grows as the beer flows and the ragged "hobos," happy for the nonce, sing roystering songs and dance if there is room, making the air hideous with their yells and guffaws of delight.

As night comes on and they become drunker some of them fall down in the yard or tumble over on the steps to sleep off their "load." Others wander away to the Levee to seek a friendly lumber pile or shed, while still a few others, with galvanized stomachs, linger in the dismal room to joke and sing and enjoy the society of the women in the rear.

"Oh! all youse Vandeventer beauts,
Wot has duh scads tuh burn,
Who wipes on towels w'en it suits,
Wit' soap at ever' turn,
Youse don' know wot good livin' is,
Wit' all yer big parade;
Youse ought tuh see me tend my bis
An' boss duh beer brigade!"

The amount of beer sold in one of these places may be surmised from the fact that Fuchs buys nothing but barrels. Kegs are too small.

Comparatively few drinks are sold over the bar. It is only about ten feet long and appears to be of no real service, except as an arm-rest for the proprietor.

One of the roomers at Fuchs' place is Kate Schmidt, a skinny dame who confesses to almost 38 years.

When a Sunday Post-Dispatch reporter and artist called at her quarters Kate had a delightful "skate" on, and she didn't care who knew it.

"How old are you, Kate?" asked Patrolman Manger.

"Thir'-seven," was the reply, with a large hiccough on the side.

"When were you born?"

"Fiffen hunner—fifteen hun—fifteen hunner 'n' eighty-eight— No! Eighteen hunner 'n' fifty-eight," replied Catherine, after a great mental and physical struggle and much blinking of the eyes. "Born secon' o' Augus'."

Kate came from Germany, and for almost a score of years has lived the same miserable life with which she is now cursing mankind. Her room is not as large as a pig stye, but the scent of it is just about as strong.

Immediately beneath her, on the first floor, live Ruth and Estella Brown, two innocent young things, whose lovers, Mike Rohan and Charlie Powell, were stabbed to death in quick succession last spring by Mike Pellmann.

All three men were members of Fuchs' beer canning brigade and were drunk when the fight occurred.

Rohan and Powell accused Pellmann of having circulated police reports concerning the Brown sisters and are supposed to have assaulted him. He killed them both in short order and attempted to stab the policeman who arrested him.

A third murder originated in Fuchs' place last August.

Matt Morris, alias Morrissey, one of the star "canners," was drunk and fell asleep in the courtyard. He had on a new hat. When he awoke it was missing.

He stepped outside and saw John Burke, a laborer, passing. Burke was wearing a new hat. Morris pursued him and cut his life out with a knife. A jury gave him three years.

Valentine street, between Second and Third streets, and Third street, south of Valentine, are the abode of several hundred negroes of the most degraded type, and most of them are patrons of Fuchs.

Valentine street, until recently, was the home of Sadie Hubert, probably the most notorious negress in St. Louis, who has killed three white men in her time and escaped punishment in each case.

There are other "can rooms" in the vicinity, but none of them are either so large or so heavily patronized.

At 305-307 South Third street is the Cleveland House, an old rookery where one may secure lodgings for 10 cents.

It was here that "Tommie" Reynolds, an old railroad laborer, supposed to have money, was hung to the joists in the cellar, March 17, this year, and then cut down and buried under an ash heap.

Several lodgers and the porter are supposed to have committed the terrible crime.

The "office" of the lodging house is used for canning purposes, and it was there, according to the evidence, that the taking-off of Reynolds was planned.

Another "can room" which enjoys a liberal patronage is kept by Carl Schrick, at Second and Valentine streets.

It is about twenty feet square, and, like every other well regulated "joint" of the kind, is provided with chairs, benches, a can and a "boss canner."

About a barrel and a half of chloride of lime would place it in fair sanitary condition. Otherwise, if the hot weather continues, Ed Butler's men will have to carry away the whole shooting match.

At Third and Spruce streets John Link, another "public benefactor," conducts an extensive thirst palace where beer is dispensed wholesale and the "canners" meet daily to make merry and contribute to the Link income.

Besides these places, Third street and Second street, in particular, are lined with cheap lodging-houses from Clark avenue south to Plum street.

Some of them are clean; some are dirty. Some are vile; some are not. Some of them are frequented by criminals. Others are the abode of the poor and unfortunate, who work when they can find employment. But all are cheap, and, to paraphrase Moore, "the trail of the canner is over them all."

The "boss canner" is a character. He is monarch of all he surveys and secondary in importance only to the proprietor.

It is his business to preserve order, and in return for this risky service he is given all he can drink, an occasional cigar and lodging, if he desires it.

He is much the same as were the overseers in slavery days, and "de gang" all fear him, for he would as lief knock a man down as look at him, and does so occasionally, just to keep his hand in.

The "boss" at Schrick's place is a river fireman, and is reputed to have a stomach which even carbolic acid couldn't touch.

"Ho, ho! I am duh jolly king
Uv all dis cannin' crew.
Look out, er I won' do a t'ing
Tuh geezers sech ez you!
I'm off me nut dis afternoon,
And spoilin' fer a fight.
Oh! I'll be fuller dan duh moon
'Fore 9 o'clock tuh-night!"

These places, degrading as they are, have been allowed to keep open uninterruptedly for years, and no attention has been paid to them by the police further than to "regulate" them and attempt to catch the murderers as quickly as they are turned out.

Their influence is more widespread than might be thought, and they are constant developers of crime.

Of three men questioned by the Post-Dispatch reporter one lived, or claimed to live, at 514 Wash street, another at 3700 South Third street and another out on Gravois road.

Sergt. O'Donnell, recently transferred from the Second Police District to the Central, is very bitter against the "can room," as she exists, and declares emphatically that he will break up the "hobo" seances that have been going on so long.

Sergt. O'Donnell visited Fuchs' place with a Sunday Post-Dispatch reporter and when he saw the woeful conditions there existing he swore a mighty oath to clean out all such places and Proprietor Fuchs needed no X-ray camera to read the omnious look in the Sergeant's eye.

A CHILD'S WILL.

She Disposes of All Her Possessions With Prudent Provisos.

Here is a child's will. It was not made by a child on her deathbed like the stories told in Sunday-school books. It was just the freak of a child's mind. She had evidently read a will, and, in full health and with no thought of dying, she modeled a very respectably worded last testament of her effects. It will be seen that the testator has been very careful. The 30 cents, all her cash capital, is willed with the proviso that it is not spent in the meantime, and other beneficiaries are made such only in the event of the testator's mamma not destroying the property.

This unique will was made by 8-year-old Bertha Ann Todd of Carthage, Mo., and witnessed by two of her little playmates. It was folded and indorsed on the back "Last will and testiment of Bertha Anna Todd."

The will follows:

"I, Bertha Anna Todd, being in my sane mind, do give and bequeath all my earthly property, viz., to-wit—namely:

"To my mother all my clothes and also my 30 cents (if I don't spend it), to do what she likes with.

"To my oldest sister Bessie I leave my gold ring and also my paper dolls.

"To my youngest sister Millie I leave my big doll and its closes, also my box with the picture of a lady on it (if mamma don't burn it up).

"To my Aunt Lou my Bible and little blue vace.

"And to my dear friend Ethel Lawton all my books.

"Also to my friend, Mary Bird, I leave my silver thimble with much love.

"And now having disposed all of my most valuable property, I hope all will be satisfied and not blame the dead.

"I forgive every one and trust we may all meet when the trump shall sound—Amen.

"To this will and testiment I set my seal on this 23d day of July, Carthage, Mo., 1895.
Witnesses: BERTHA ANNA TODD.

A FABLE REVAMPED.

It Took Cunning and Two Tortoises to Outwit the Hare.

In a variation of the fable of the Hare and the Tortoise, the Hedgehog, or rather Mrs. Hedgehog, plays the chief part. It is not generally known among the beasts that the hedgehog has a wife; they are never both out together, and in the matter of prickles there is little difference. And the male hedgehog goes about like a gay young bachelor, and boasts a good deal of this and that and especially of his speed in running.

The hare overheard him one day and challenged him to a race. The hedgehog was ashamed to decline the challenge and went home to his wife in great tribulation, for he dreaded the ridicule of his opponent and the loss of the wager.

"Leave it to me," said Mrs. Hedgehog; "you shall win the race; but stipulate that you shall run with the hedge between you, and from the top of the field to the bottom and back again."

The hare agreed to these conditions and saw his competitor duly posted at the starting point. Meanwhile, Mrs. Hedgehog had hidden herself in a hole under the hedge at the other end.

The hare gave the word "off" and started, himself at full speed, while his rival curled himself up under the hedge and awaited events. The hare reached the bottom of the field in a trice, when up popped Mrs. Hedgehog.

"What, already!" cried the hare. "This time I must fly!"

And fly he did, like the wind—but there was his rival at the winning post before him.

"One must never underrate an adversary," said the hare to himself, as he saw the hedgehog walk away with the stakes.

DOES HYDROPHOBIA REALLY EXIST?

EXPERT MEDICAL OPINION IS THAT IT IS ONLY A MADNESS OF THE MIND.

These are the days when the humble canine of uncertain antecedents cuts a wide swath.

As he passes up the street with his tail at half-mast, people eye him warily and give him all the room he wants.

Nobody offers to kick him and nobody is foolhardy enough to decorate him with the ancient order of the tin can.

Not on his caudal appendage.

In the hot days of late July and early August the mad dog scare materializes with unfailing regularity.

During the cooler months of the year the average citizen concurs in that clause of the traditional small boy's essay which says that "the dog is a useful animal."

But when hot weather comes on apace it is remembered that the same small boy with rare sagacity also wrote, "he sometimes bites."

The popular belief that dogs are more irritable and dangerous in the hot summer months than in other seasons of the year has prevailed from time immemorial in all temperate and torrid countries. The fear of hydrophobia is equally as old and deep-seated. The mad dog is popularly regarded with as much dread as a pestilence.

Still, modern science, with its iconoclastic tendency, asserts that it is doubtful if such a disease as hydrophobia exists at all, or if it does it is extremely rare. To a certain extent it classes the belief in the existence of the malady in the category of popular superstitions.

It is true that the learned savants do not deny the existence of mad dogs. Neither do they ignore the fact that the bite of animals so afflicted causes, in many cases, the most intense physical suffering and a horrible death. Still they say that the term "hydrophobia" as applied to these cases is a misnomer.

The theory very generally accepted by physicians is that so-called hydrophobia is in many cases a form of tetanus, or lock jaw, and that the bite of a dog is only one of the many causes which may lead up to it. They furthermore hold that in most cases the disease is nothing more than a nervous affection, which the person who has been bitten brings upon himself by brooding over the matter. The general testimony of medical men is that if hydrophobia ever develops in man, it is extremely rare, and that what is called hydrophobia is a condition of hysterical excitement due to dread of the disease.

Some of the most noted physicians of modern times have subscribed to this belief.

Sir Charles W. Dulles, lecturer on the history of medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, believes that there is no such specific malady as hydrophobia, and that there is not a case on record conclusively proven to have been caused by the bite of a dog.

Dr. Joseph Hearn of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, says that the bite of a dog is no more dangerous than the scratch of a pin or the puncture of an infectious nail.

The scientists have an abundance of statistics to bear out their theory.

The records of the London Hospital show that out of 2,668 people bitten by angry dogs not a single case of hydrophobia developed. At St. George's Hospital, London, 4,000 people bitten by supposed mad dogs were treated with not a case of rabies. At the Pennsylvania hospital there have only been two cases of supposed hydrophobia in 140 years.

One of these cases was submitted to bacteriological tests and the diagnosis was not confirmed. The municipal authorities refused to record the death as having been caused by hydrophobia.

There is another point on which the scientists do not agree with the general public. It is popularly believed the bite of a dog conveys a specific poison into the system.

Eminent physicians deny this and say that there is no trace of poison even in the froth which exudes from the mouth of a rabid dog. They say that in all cases where the abrasion does not produce tetanus, so-called hydrophobia is a hysterical malady.

Exponents of this theory are not shaken in their belief by the cures wrought by Dr. Pasteur and his followers. They point to the fact that Pasteur himself was never able to discover a specific hydrophobia germ and that his cure was found as effective in cases of tetanus as in cases of supposed hydrophobia.

It is a matter of record that very few of those bitten by dogs ever develop any symptoms of madness afterwards. Statistics show that 150,000 dogs have been handled at the Philadelphia dog pound in twenty-five years. Every man employed about the place during that time has been bitten and not a case of anything resembling hydrophobia has developed. The same condition of affairs applies to the St. Louis dog pound or that of any other city.

St. Louis statistics are equally convincing.

But still people are bitten and frighten themselves into so-called hydrophobia, and at this season it is apropos to cite medical opinions on the subject, as having a tendency to dissipate this nervous dread which produces often fatal results. A Sunday Post-Dispatch reporter last week interviewed several St. Louis physicians with the following result:

Dr. C. H. Hughes, who is recognized as authority on nervous diseases, said: "This so-called hydrophobia is lyssaphobia—the fear of going mad—in the majority of cases of so-called rabies. Rabies is exceedingly rare. Most people are bitten by dogs who are not mad and many of those bitten, even when the dog is really mad, are bitten through the clothing, and thus escape being poisoned.

"Dr. Chas. W. Dulle's article was written some time ago, and Spitzka and others had before him denied the existence of true rabies, hence came into use the term hydrophobia (the fear of becoming mad).

"Dr. Hearne and his predecessors and followers, seeing the frequent cases of hydrophobia, hysterical madness, hystero-epilepsy, etc., developed after the bite of a rabid dog, or one supposed to be rabid, which is most common, have concluded that there is no such condition as true rabies.

"But dogs do have rabies, and when such dogs bite on the naked skin and their virus is absorbed by other animals, including man (and sometimes herds of animals have been thus destroyed), the madness may be communicated. I have seen both the true and the false rabies, and some of the other nervous disorders excited by the bite of dogs not mad."

Dr. Jordan, chief dispensary physician, said that on an average two persons suffering from dog bite are treated there every day. In the history of the institution only one case resembling true rabies resulted. Speaking of the danger supposed to attend dog bites, Dr. Jordan said:

"I am not a very stanch believer in the existence of hydrophobia. I never saw but one case that I thought might have been caused by the bite of a dog. About a year ago a negro was brought here suffering from a spasm of the glottis. He had been bitten by a dog several months before. He was a very heavy drinker and I have never been quite sure but that his trouble was not caused by liquor. He died at the City Hospital twenty-four hours later. His relatives would not permit us to make a post-mortem examination and we never ascertained the exact cause of his death.

"Though I would not care to say that there is no such specific malady as hydrophobia I have serious doubts. I believe the affection is to a large extent a hysterical condition. In some cases the infectious wound caused by the dog's bite results in tetanus. At any rate I would rather be bitten by a dog than have a rusty nail in my foot. We treat several thousand cases of dog bite here every year and we never hear from any of them again.

"So far as I have observed there is not in supposed cases of hydrophobia that aversion to water which is generally supposed to accompany the malady. There is simply a physical inability to drink owing to a spasm in the glottis. The patient finds it as impossible to drink any other liquid, and tea or coffee will produce the spasm as readily as water. I think that the belief in hydrophobia is one of those legacies of the past which will be dissipated sooner or later by the light of modern science."

Dr. Lippe of the Dispensary force thinks that hydrophobia is merely a form of tetanus.

"I have never seen a case of hydrophobia," he said, "and do not believe there is any such specific disease.

"The same symptoms as are found in hydrophobia, so-called, have been caused and may at any time be caused by an abrasion on infectious wound from any other cause. The bite of any animal or of a human being is as dangerous as that of a dog. This is not an alarming assertion, as the bite of a dog does not cause serious trouble in one case out of ten thousand. The popular superstition about mad dogs is largely overdrawn. I never saw a mad dog and never met anyone who had. Excessive heat sometimes causes a stoppage of the throat, producing the white foam which always accompanies spasms. This foam contains no virus. In my opinion the bite of a so-called mad dog is not more dangerous than that of a dog in a normal condition."

Dr. Kearney is the only physician at the Dispensary who believes in the existence of hydrophobia as a specific malady.

To a Post-Dispatch reporter he said: "I certainly believe that there is such a disease as hydrophobia. A great many physicians will tell you that the disease is merely a nervous affection brought on by excessive fear of contracting the disease after being bitten.

"If that is the case, how can they account for the fact that a horse or a cow bitten by a mad dog develops the same symptoms within a short time? It cannot be presumed that the horse or the cow works itself up to nervous paroxysm.

"I firmly believe that the specific germ of hydrophobia will be discovered."

Dispensary Physician Thompson is another of the skeptics.

"During the time I have been practicing medicine," he said, "I have never seen a case of hydrophobia or a mad dog. The disease is brought on by hysterical excitement. The mental anguish caused by fear brings on physical conditions which result in spasms of the throat.

"There must always be an exciting cause. A person who has not been bit cannot work himself into hydrophobia. An incident which occurred at an Eastern college some years ago seems to prove conclusively the emotional nature of the disease. The students at the college were in the habit of playing jokes on the janitor. One night they got the old fellow in a darkened room. One of the boys gave a yelp in imitation of a dog, at the same time prodding the janitor in the leg with a sharp instrument, producing a slight abrasion. They then turned up the light and excitedly examined the old man's leg. They told him that he had been bitten by a dog, and in a bantering fashion told him he was likely to have hydrophobia. The old man got thoroughly frightened. A week later a spasm of the glottis set in, and the man died with all the symptoms supposed to accompany hydrophobia. This case is a matter of record, and is cited in most standard medical works.

"The fact that Dr. Pasteur discovered a cure for hydrophobia counts for little, as his cure is not a specific for dog bite, but affections which may result from widely different causes."

Dr. Otto Sutter, superintendent of the City Hospital, is not one of the skeptics.

"Very few cases of hydrophobia figure on the records of the City Hospital," he said. "There has not been a single case during my administration and only three or four cases since the founding of the hospital. Still I am a firm believer in the existence of hydrophobia as a specific disease. I believe it has its specific virus and is most likely to result from a dog bite, though it may develop from the bite of other animals.

"I saw and observed four cases of hydrophobia right here in St. Louis. I did not find that there was an aversion to water, but an inability to drink it owing to a spasm of the throat.

"The involuntary exclamation of pain uttered by the patient when the spasm comes on is not unlike the bark of a dog, though this is due largely to the condition of the throat. I do not think that hydrophobia is in any sense a hysterical affection, though hysterical people can sometimes imitate the symptoms very closely."

Dr. Frank J. Lutz, chief physician of the Alexian Brothers' Hospital, said:

"That hydrophobia does exist is a settled fact. It is a virulent, infectious disease, usually communicated to human beings by rabid dogs, wolves and foxes, and other members of the canine family. It may be communicated to other animals. In 1885 several of the deer in Richmond Park, England, died of this dreadful disease.

"Where the dog gets the virus is unknown, but it is spread by means of the bite and the saliva. The spinal cord and the medulla oblongata are affected and in the last stages the muscles of the throat become paralyzed.

"The sight of anything which may be swallowed, such as water, produces spasms, and it is from this peculiar symptom that the disease derives its name.

"Intense mental excitement is an accompaniment of the disease, but it is neither the disease itself nor the cause of it.

"Those who do not believe that hydrophobia exists should visit the Pasteur Institute in Paris. I once saw 80 persons there at once undergoing treatment for rabies.

"During the ten years ending with 1891, according to the official records, nine persons died of hydrophobia in New York City. Four persons died of the same disease in Germany in 1887.

"There is a difference between a mad dog and a dog mad, just as there is between an angry person and an insane person. It is only the bite of the mad dog that is to be feared.

"Fortunately the disease is rare. In Germany it has been almost eradicated by the proper muzzling of dogs, and in Australia it is unknown."

Ritualistic English Churches.

How great the growth of ritualistic practices has been in the church of England the last fourteen years is shown by some figures compiled by the Tourists' Church Guide. In 1882 daily communion was administered in 123 churches in Great Britain, in 1896 in 474 churches. Incense used in nine churches fourteen years ago is now used in 307. The figures for churches using lights on the altar are 581 and [illegible]; for those where vestments are employed, [illegible] and 1,632, and for those where the worshipers face the east, [illegible] and [illegible].

THERE NE'ER WAS SUCH A DAY BEFORE AS "OUR DAY OUT."

The Boys and Girls of the Slums Out of Their Element.

No Race or Color Known---Nothing on Two Legs Was Barred.

A Study of the Youngsters as They Appeared Before, During and After the Salvation Army Picnic.

"Our day out."

It was a simple inscription on a plain bit of ribbon, but the little girl on whose breast it was pinned patted it tenderly, as though it were capable of appreciating human affection.

To her it meant much.

It was a souvenir of the happiest day she had ever known—a memento of the Salvation Army picnic.

It was several weeks ago that Brig. French and his associates conceived the idea of giving a picnic for the benefit of the children in what is known as the slum district.

SOME TYPES OF BOOTBLACKS AT THE PICNIC.

The work of collecting names was at once commenced. No color, no nationality was barred. It was a children's picnic, and all were welcome.

About 500 invitations were issued, and of the number included fully one-fourth were colored.

DIDN'T GET ANY ICE CREAM.

For a whole month the coming picnic was the talk of the children. They had never heard of anything so pleasant in anticipation.

The little street gamin, who sells papers to help his parents eke out a living; the pale-faced little girl who assists her mother with the household duties, and the deserted waif who knows no home except the meager shelter he is able to find for himself, were wild with joy.

As they raced about the streets in the evening, barefooted and bareheaded, with tattered clothing and unkempt hair, they were happy at the thought of the pleasure in store for them.

"Hi, dere, Chimmie! Is youse goin' tuh duh picnic?"

This and similar cries made the atmosphere of Second and Third streets seem brighter than it had been for many a day.

"Hully gee, but dese Salvation Army folks is corkers!"

"Say, I won' do a ting!"

"Wot kin' uv a place is dis yere O'Fallum Park, ennyway?"

To these and many other exclamations the bedraggled and grimy youngsters gave expression, and it must be admitted that some of them, though proceeding from infantile mouths, would not bear publication without a liberal use of dashes or revision by a diligent expurgator.

Nevertheless, such words served to give expression to their joy, and the language used was the chastest at their command, for the atmosphere of the slums is not conducive to delicacy of speech.

The picnic was the only theme of conversation after the day it was first announced.

With childish eagerness and expectancy almost painful the little ones awaited the coming of the great day when they should go forth with banners and music and song to view the wide world, of which they had heard so much and seen so little.

When the time arrived not a single one was left behind. From all over that part of the city between Clark and Chouteau avenues, Fourth street and the river, the children came trooping, singing and in crowds, rushing through the streets with feverish haste, eager to reach the street car track and start upon the momentous expedition for the conquest of pleasure.

They met at the French Market and Union Market, where 100 members of the Salvation Army were already waiting.

Around these points were soon gathered the eager throngs of children, some of them holding to the skirts of pale, excited mothers; others gazing in wonder at the tall buildings and showy windows, and still others rushing heedlessly in front of cable and electric cars to the imminent danger of life and limb.

Finally they were lined up like little soldiers, and each was presented with a flag—some red, some yellow, some blue—the different emblems of the Salvation Army, but most of them with plain American flags a foot long.

The band played and when several trains of Broadway cable cars lined up to receive them, by special arrangement, there was not in all St. Louis a more jubilant throng of children than the army of little ones headed by Brig. French and his staff.

The bunting on the cars fluttered in the breeze; the flags waved merrily, the band continued to play and nearly 700 happy human beings sped away up the line to O'Fallon Park.

It was a great day.

The trip was accomplished without incident and the park was reached after a ride of twenty minutes. The children were formed into twenty companies of twenty-five members each, officers were placed in charge, and they marched up the steep hill to the pleasant grounds beyond, near the lake on the west side of the park.

A provision tent had already been erected and there was also an emergency tent, with its cots and chairs, where those who should become sick or tired might rest.

The different companies were stationed at convenient distances apart, and the nearest tree was placarded, so that the matter of assembling could be made the work of a moment.

WAITING FOR REFRESHMENTS.

Each person present was furnished with a badge of ribbon on which was printed these words: "O'Fallon Park. Our Day Out. July 15," surmounted by the Salvation Army crest.

After these details had been arranged the companies were disbanded and the entire assemblage abandoned itself to pleasure.

And such pleasure as it was! Joys which, until that day, had been "unseen, unfelt, unheard, unknown." The joys of romping childhood; the glint of the green grass in the sunlight; the whispering of the breezes that said soft nothings to the careless flowers; the splashing of the clear water in the lake; the waving branches of a thousand trees; merry chases down the hillsides and through valleys and a breath of wholesome air on a perfect day.

These are but a tithe of the pleasures they enjoyed. Fond mothers were there to look after the welfare of their children—fond, tired mothers, with babes in their arms—sickly mothers, whose pale faces lighted up with joy and whose sunken eyes beamed with pleasure as they drank in the delightful breeze and bared their heads in the sunlight and heard the laughter and saw the glowing faces of their innocent offspring, who were happier that day than they had ever been in their lives.

BRIGADIER FRENCH.

The color line was obliterated. Black and white played together and tumbled over each other with all the abandon of democratic childhood. Most were bare-footed some were bareheaded; some still wore winter clothes; others were dressed simply, but neatly, in the best their parents could afford. Some faces were dirty, some were clean, but these things made no difference, for all were happy.

A colored boy killed a snake and chased the white girls all over one end of the park with it. In turn the white boys chased the colored girls with a live toad, and enjoyed their screams of fright and the excitement of the run.

The children played few games, for they had not been raised to play. They had been bred in poverty and born to work, and they were at a loss for amusement, save for the merry romps in which childhood naturally finds diversion.

Yet they enjoyed every minute of the time, for to them it was a new world.

There was the pale little girl with the faded brown hair. There was the saucy little boy with the bright black eyes. There was the strapping colored boy with the white handkerchief around his neck and his hat hanging on one ear. There was the overgrown colored girl with her bare black legs, like columns of ebony. There was the profane little boy and the girl with the big mouth who was used to profanity and the like, and when one very dry urchin expressed a longing for beer it did not move her, for she had carried the can to the corner a thousand times.

All of these types were there, and they made the most of every minute, for it was a gala day, whose like they had never known.

Naturally they became hungry—hungrier than they usually are—and when the bugle sounded to call the children together they fairly screamed with delight when they saw the spread that had been prepared.

There were sandwiches and cookies and bananas and doughnuts, canned fruit, pure sweet milk and lemonade.

Who had ever heard of so many good things being collected together at once before?

This pleasure was renewed at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when a similar repast was served, but their cups of joy fairly ran over when, two hours later, they were again called together and each child was presented with a banana, a pear and a small box of candy.

When the band played again the cornetist outdid all previous efforts, the whole assemblage sang two or three religious songs, and before a great while the line of march was again formed, the happy picnic grounds were deserted and the Salvation Army outing was at an end.

"Dear Jesus, I love thee!" sang a little maiden of 8 years, as she tripped merrily along a sidewalk on South Second street last Wednesday night and bounded up the stairway of a dingy tenement.

Her light brown hair floated on the heavy breeze, laden with smoke and unwholesome gases. Around her was life in its lowest forms. The street was filthy. A policeman was standing on the corner with a cursing negress, who was under arrest. The stores, the lodging-houses and the saloons were grimy with smoke and dirt of many years' standing. The sun had set and night had closed in upon the habitat of the poor and lowly, the vicious and degraded. A sputtering arc light on the corner was the only sentinel to guide the wayfarer in his passage through the dismal neighborhood.

Yet this little maiden was happy. The simple dress she wore cost only a few cents, but it was her best, and it was clean. There was a sparkle in her eye and a spring in her step that contrasted strangely with her gloomy surroundings. There was the innocence of childhood in her manner and voice, and she prattled her song as cheerily and unthinkingly as the linnet sings.

"Dear Jesus, I love thee!" How strangely the words sounded in that unholy environment!

They were like a single drop of water in that vast Sahara of wickedness, or the first gleam of sunshine after a week of gloom.

The childish voice died away as the little one bounded up the stairway, but doubtless it kept on singing, for the owner was happy.

Only an hour before she had returned from the Salvation Army picnic at O'Fallon Park, where she had spent the most enjoyable day of her brief life. The sunshine lingered in her heart. The song of the birds still echoed in her ears, and still, in fancy, she heard the sound of the laughing waves as they chased each other across the lake. The voices of merry children—the gleam of many-colored flags in the sunlight—the kindly accents of the meek Salvation Army lasses—the sheen of the emerald leaves—the bunches of red geraniums—the hardy young trees that she hugged with delight—the pure air and the glorious gleam of the golden sun—the memory of all these things, so new and strange, lingered in her childish mind and brought pleasure to her childish heart, that had known so little in its eight years of beating save the dull glare of red brick walls, the rumbling of heavy wagons and the uninteresting scenes of the narrow, smoky street on which she lived.

Hence it was that she tripped so merrily along, singing the praises of the Savior, of whose existence she had learned from the lips of the Salvation Army teachers.

And so it may be with the others. Their happiness may find expression in song and their humble homes may be made better and brighter because of the one day of pleasure that shone through their lives like a shaft of sunlight through a day of gloom.

She's not the shrinking thing of yore—

HERE IS THE GENEALOGICAL TREE OF THE NEXT VICE-PRESIDENT.

The Sewall Family Has Produced Many Distinguished Judges, Poets, Preachers and Statesmen.

Written for the Post-Dispatch.

Several of the biographical sketches of General Arthur Sewall, the Democratic Vice Presidential candidate, which have been published time and time again during the last week, stated that this gentleman could trace his descent to the ancient English kings.

Such allegations are frequently met with, and in many cases cannot be refuted. They appear, at first glance, of more value than they really possess. There are hundreds of families in England and America which can clearly trace their descent to the old rulers of the British kingdoms. It is only feasible that such is the fact. The old kings were continually at war with their vassal barons, who rebelled against the rule of their overlords and were always willing to form alliances by marrying their daughters to some of their former enemies. The higher nobility intermarried with the less powerful gentry and thus, through the female line, a very distant relationship to the royal family was established.

Many of the earliest emigrants who settled in New England and Virginia were of the English gentry, and this fact explains the claims of many American families to noble descent.

ARTHUR SEWALL.

In the case of the Sewall family it would appear to be carrying things too far to attempt to show a descent from the old English kings. We shall content ourselves with reviewing the actual ancestry of the Sewalls, which, though not of the blood royal, is sufficiently illustrious to be pointed to with pride by the descendants.

The first of the family who appears in history is John de Sewale, citizen of London, mentioned in a letter from the Mayor and Aldermen of the city of London to the Mayor, bailiffs and good folk of the town of Oxford, which is dated Jan. 11, 1365.

John Seawale was Sheriff of Essex and Hertfordshire in the fourth year of King Richard II., A. D. 1381. His armorial bearing are said by Fuller in his "Worthies of England" to have been: "Sable, a chevron between three gad-flies, argent," which have been handed down, with little change, to the present time.

THE SEWALL FAMILY COAT OF ARMS.

Among the names of the gentry of the county of Essex, returned by the commissioners in the twelfth year of King Henry VI., A. D. 1433, that of Richard Sewale is found.

A Dr. Sewell, citizen of London, is frequently mentioned in the "Rutland Papers," dated 1522, and Symon Sewell is a witness in a will probated at Mendlesham, county of Suffolk, on Dec. 12, 1537.

Papworth gives the same arms mentioned above to the family of Seewell of Thingdon, county Northampton, and Sewale, county of Chester. The same arms, with slight changes, are still borne by the Sewells of Newport, Isle of Wight.

Henry Sewall, born about the year 1544, became Alderman of Coventry, County of Warwick, and served as Mayor of this city in 1589 and 1606. He was married to Margaret, eldest daughter of Avery Grazebrook of Middleton, County Warwick, and died April 16, 1628.

His brother, William Sewall, a vintner, was Mayor of Coventry in 1617. He married Anne, daughter of Henry Wagstaffe of Harberg, who is mentioned among the gentry in the Visitation of Warwickshire, in 1619.

Henry Sewall left two sons and two daughters. Of these, Anne married Anthony Power, gentleman, of Kensworth, County Warwick; Margaret became the wife of Abraham Randall, gentleman, of Coventry. The sons were Henry and Richard. The latter settled at Nuneaton, County of Warwick, and married Mary, daughter of John Dugdale, and sister of Sir William Dugdale, the eminent antiquary and herald. He had three sons and six daughters.

Henry, the elder son of the Mayor of Coventry, was baptized at St. Michael's Church in that city, on April 8 1576, and emigrated to New England about 1634, at the age of nearly 60 years. He died at Rowley, Mass., in 1657, aged 81 years, leaving by his marriage to Anne Hunt an only son, Henry.

This Henry, who was born in Coventry in 1614, came to New England at the age of 20 years, settling at Newbury, Mass. Here, in 1646, he married Jane, daughter of Stephen and Alice Dummer.

The Dummer family, which had come to America four years later than the Sewalls, belonged to the gentry of the County of Hampshire. It could trace its descent to the eleventh century and claimed relationship to many of the most powerful barons. Richard Pyldren, who assumed the name of Dummer after marrying an heiress of that name, died in 1540, at Owlesbury, Hampshire, near the old family estate of Swathling. His grandson was Thos. Dummer of Bishopstoke, who had five sons—John, Richard, Thomas, Stephen and William. Of these, Richard and Stephen emigrated to America, but Stephen returned to England in 1647, one year after his daughter had married Henry Sewall. From Richard Dummer, the brother who remained in New England; William Dummer, Governor of Massachusetts (1716-28); his brother Jeremiah, the noted writer and scholar, and Chief Justice John Dummer of Massachusetts were directly descended.

By Jane Dummer, Henry Sewall had eight children, three sons and five daughters. The sons were Samuel, John and Stephen; of the daughters, Hannah, born in 1649, married Jacob Tappan of Newbury; Jane, born in 1659, married Moses Gerrish; Anne became the wife of William Longfellow of Newbury, and was the great-great-great-grandmother of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, the illustrious poet; Mehetable, born in 1665, married William Moody, and Dorothy married Ezekiel Northend.

Samuel was born in Bishopstoke, England, on March 28, 1652. He received his early education in England, continued his lessons at Newbury, Mass., and entered Harvard in 1667, where he studied divinity and preached once before he was ordained. Later on, however, he left the ministry and entered public life. One of his first offices after his marriage was to assume charge of the printing press in Boston. In 1692 he became a member of the Council and Judge of the Probate Court. As a judge he took a prominent part in judging the witches during the time of the Salem witchcraft. Of all the judges who took part in that historic action, he was the only one who publicly confessed his error. The memory of it haunted him for years, until in January, 1697, he confessed in a "bill," which was read before the congregation of the old South Church in Boston by the minister. During the remaining thirty-one years of his life he spent one day annually in fasting and meditation and prayer, to keep in mind a sense of the enormity of his offense. In 1718, Judge Sewall was appointed Chief Justice, and served as such until 1728, when he retired on account of the increasing infirmities of old age.

He wrote numerous books and tracts, among them one entitled "The Selling of Joseph," in which he advocated the rights of the slaves. His diary and his letters are very interesting, and throw light upon the civil and social life of the day in a marked degree. He was very benevolent and charitable, and his sympathies were always with the down-trodden races of humanity. Judge Sewall died in Boston, Jan. 1, 1730. He had been married three times. His first wife was Hannah, only daughter of John Hull and Judith Quincy. John Hull was mint master of the Massachusetts colony and its treasurer from 1675 to 1680, and was an ancestor of the two famous generals, William Hull and Isaac Hull. Judith Quincy was the daughter of Edmund Quincy of Northamptonshire, from whom the numerous Quincys, who have gained distinction in the history of this country are descended. The family seems to have been connected with the Quincys who were companions in arms of William the Conqueror and Earls of Winchester in the thirteenth century. The arms are the same, although the American Quincys have never claimed descent from the ancient barons of their name. Judge Samuel's second wife was Abigail, daughter of Jacob Milyen, and after her decease in 1720 he married, thirdly, Mary, daughter of Henry Shrimpton. By his first wife he had thirteen children—six sons and seven daughters.

Of his sons, Joseph, born in Boston, Aug. 26, 1688, achieved the greatest fame. He studied theology, was elected President of Harvard in 1724, but declined. He was one of the commissioners appointed by the London corporation for propagating the Gospel in New England, and a corresponding member of the Scottish society for promoting Christian knowledge. He was a rigid Calvinist, and a foe to free discussion and novel opinions, but a charitable man and well liked. He married Elizabeth Wally, and died in Boston June 27, 1769.

His son Samuel married Elizabeth Quincy and was father of Samuel and Joseph. Of these the elder was born in Boston in 1757, studied law and practiced in Marblehead, Mass. He was frequently a member of the Legislatures, was elected to Congress for two successive terms, and served from May 15, 1897, till Jan. 10, 1800, when he resigned on being appointed Judge of the Massachussetts Supreme Court. He became Chief Judge in 1813, and died while holding court at Wicassett, in 1814, where a monument was erected to his memory by the members of the bar. His eldest son, Samuel, born at Marblehead in 1785, was pastor of the Congregational Church at Burlington, Mass., and a fertile writer; he died in Burlington Feb. 18, 1868. Another son was the Rev. Charles Chauncy Sewall of Boston, whose descendants, as well as those of his brothers, are still living in Massachussetts.

Stephen Sewall, the youngest brother of Judge Samuel Sewall, was born in 1657 and married Margaret, daughter of Rev. Jonathan Mitchell, the noted pastor of Cambridge, Mass. He left numerous sons and daughters. Of the former, Stephen, born in Salem, Mass., Dec. 18, 1707, died Sept. 10, 1760, was librarian of Harvard from 1726 till 1728, was appointed Judge of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts in 1739, Chief Justice in 1752 and served as such until his death.

His nephew, Jonathan, born at Boston in 1728, studied law and practiced in Charlestown. He inclined to the patriotic side of the disputes with Great Britain until he was chagrined by the refusal of the Legislature to pay the debts left by his uncle and by the opposition of James Otis and his father to his petition. He was rewarded for his subsequent adhesion to the cause of the English with the posts of Solicitor-General, Advocate-General and Judge of the Admiralty. He was offered the appointment of Judge of Admiralty at Halifax, but declined. No lawyer in Massachusetts surpassed him in eloquence or acuteness. After he signed an address to Gov. Thomas Hutchinson, his mansion in Cambridge was wrecked by a mob in Sept. 1774. He fled to Boston, and a few months later took ship for England, where he lived for a short time in London and afterwards mostly in Bristol. His estate in Massachusetts was confiscated under the act of 1779. In 1788 he removed to St. John, New Brunswick, where he resumed legal practice. His wife and the wife of the noted John Hancock, signer of the Declaration of Independence were daughters of Edmund Quincy of Boston. His sons were Jonathan Sewall, Chief Justice of Canada, and Stephen, Solicitor-General of that province.

A nephew of Stephen, the Chief Justice of Massachusetts, was the noted poet, Jonathan Mitchell Sewall (1748-1808), who wrote "War and Washington," a favorite song of the soldiers of the Revolutionary Army; numerous patriotic lyrics and an "Epilogue to Cato."

The second brother of Judge Samuel Sewall of witchcraft fame, was John, who married in 1671 Hannah Fessenden of Cambridge, of that family, which has given this country so many able jurists, legislators, orators and soldiers. He had one daughter, Hannah, and six sons, John, Henry, Stephen, Samuel, Nicholas and Thomas. Of these several removed to the district of Maine.

Of the second generation of the main branch of Sewalls, quite a number deserve special mention, principally the three brothers, Samuel, Stephen and David.

SOME SEWALL SIGNATURES.

Samuel, born in York, Me., in 1724, was the inventor of various useful improvements in engineering. He is said to have been the first to drive piles as a foundation for bridges, introducing the device at York in 1761. In 1786 he erected the Charlestown bridge on this plan.

His brother, Stephen, born at York in 1734, became in 1762 Librarian and Instructor in Hebrew at Harvard, and two years later Professor of Hebrew, occupying the chair till 1785. He was an active Whig during the Revolution, and represented Cambridge in the general court in 1777. His wife was a daughter of Col. Edward Wigglesworth, the noted Revolutionary soldier. He died at Boston in 1804.

Another brother, David (1735-1825) practiced as a lawyer in York, was appointed Justice of the Peace in 1762, and Register of Probate in 1766. Like his friend and classmate, John Adams, he was an earnest Whig and was an earnest patriot from the beginning of the Revolution. He was Representative for York in 1776, was chosen a member of the Council of Massachusetts, and was appointed in 1777 a Justice of the Superior Court. From 1789 till 1818 he was United States Judge for the district of Maine.

David's nephew, Jonathan, born at York in 1760, was a noted missionary. He was installed as pastor of the Congregational Church in Chesterville in 1820, but continued his missionary tours, preaching whenever a few could be gathered together, on week days as well as on Sundays, and organized many new churches. His field was confined chiefly to Maine and parts of New Hampshire and Rhode Island, though his journeys extended into eleven other States and into New Brunswick.

His cousin, Thomas Sewall, born in Augusta, Me., in 1786, died at Washington, D. C., April 10, 1845, practiced as a physician in Essex, Mass., till 1820, when he removed to Washington. In 1821 he was appointed Professor of Anatomy in the National Medical College of Columbian University. He began his lectures in 1825, and continued them till his death. He published numerous works and established a reputation as an original investigator in Europe as well as in the United States.

A grand-nephew of Rev. Jotham Sewall, Rufus King Sewall, born at Edgecomb, Me., Jan. 21, 1814, was educated as a clergyman; but the condition of his health prevented him from accepting a permanent pastorate. He resided for five years in St. Augustine, Fla., studied law with his uncle, Kiah B. Sewall of Mobile, Ala., returned to Maine before the civil war, was admitted to the bar in 1860, and has since practiced at Wiscassett.

Rev. Jotham Sewall's grandson, John Smith Sewall, born at Newcastle, Me., on March 20, 1830, was graduated at Bowdoin in 1850, went with the expedition of Commodore Matthew C. Perry on the Saratoga as captain's clerk to China and Japan, taught for a year after his return, then entered Bangor Theological Seminary, and was graduated in 1858. He was pastor of the Congregational Church at Wenham, Mass., till 1867, when he became Professor of Rhetoric and English Literature at Bowdoin. He exchanged this chair in 1875 for that of homiletics at Bangor Theological Seminary.

Of the second generation of the Maine Sewalls was Dummer Sewall, who went from York to Bath, Me., in 1762, and purchased the tract of land on which to this day the shipyards and the houses of the Sewall family are located. He was a soldier of the revolution and distinguished himself in many encounters.

His grandson, William D. Sewall, opened up his shipyards in Bath, Me., in [illegible]. He was succeeded by his sons, Edward and Arthur Sewall, the latter of whom, who was born at Bath in 1835, is the present Democratic Vice Presidential nominee.

While the American Sewalls have retained the ancient spelling of the name, the English branches of the family have changed the orthography to Sewell. This name is quite extensively found in England, but it is very probable that all the families that bear it are descended from the same source. Quite a number of the English Sewells have found a place in history.

Sir Thomas Sewell, son of Thomas Sewall of West Ham, County of Essex, was appointed, in 1754, one of the king's counsel, was member of Parliament in 1754 and 1761, created master of the rolls 1764, knighted in the same year and died in 1784.

William Sewell, the historian of the Quakers (1650-1720), was born at Amsterdam, in Holland. His grandfather, William Sewell, had resided at Kidderminster, in England, but being one of the sect of the Brownists, had left his native country for the more free enjoyment of his religious principles. He married a Dutch woman of Utrecht and settled there.

George Sewell was a noted English poet and physician. He was born at Windsor and died at London in 1726.

Rev. William Sewell born on the Isle of Wight in 1805, has achieved fame as a theological writer, and his sister, Elizabeth Missing Sewell, as a writer of High Church fiction.

Of a branch of the English Sewells, which settled in Ireland, was William Joyce Sewall, born in Castlebar, December 6, 1835, who did gallant service during the Civil War, received the brevet of brigadier-general of volunteers for his bravery at Chancellorsville, and was United States Senator from New Jersey from 1881 till 1887.

The Sewall arms, which are found on the book-plates of the New England Sewalls are: "Sable, a chevron between three bees, argent; crest; a bee, or." A motto has not been used generally.

E. L. KALTENBACH.

THEY CALLED HIM PAT.

The Man Was Insulted, but He Went to the Wrong Person for Sympathy.

He was full—unmistakably full. In one hand he carried a "minnie" bucket and on one shoulder several long fishing poles. Apparently he had swallowed the bait.

Yes, he was full. Moreover, he was angry.

One-half of his shirt hung down in a drunk-and-disorderly fashion that looked bad. He was a much-abused citizen and he had a tale of woe. Quite naturally he sought a policeman.

Patrolman Tebeau, a cousin of Patsy, the base ball man, alighted from a car at Twelfth street and Chouteau avenue.

"Hey, there!" bawled the fisherman. "Jush man I wan' fuh shee!"

"What's the trouble?" asked Tebeau.

"Wanshu 'rest that gang over there," pointing to a crowd on the corner. "They 'nsulted me."

"What did they do?"

Great tears of indignation rolled down the fisherman's cheek as he blubbered in the most lugubrious of tones:

"They called me Pat!"

The insulted angler wept some more and kept on repeating his story. Tebeau caught a car on the fly and the fisherman staggered over to the corner to clean out the gang who had called him Pat.

CUPS THAT CAUSED A TRAGEDY.

The Scramble Cost Thousands of Lives at the Moscow Coronation.

The wild rush of peasants at the coronation of the Czar on the Hodynsky Plain at Moscow was caused by the scramble to secure small cups designed to commemorate the occasion. They were small, of white enamel and traced with designs in red and blue. One side showed the imperial eagle, while the other had the letters N. I., the initials of Nicholas Imperator.

It was in the stampede for these cups that thousands of Russian peasants were trampled to death at Moscow.

Six hundred thousand of these cups were made by a firm in Vienna within two months. Intrinsically they are not worth much, but many of them are treasured in Russian homes as mementoes of mourning. While intended as souvenirs of the coronation, they became souvenirs of one of the most awful catastrophes of recent years. Nearly three thousand people were killed in the struggle to obtain the cups.

Wellington Hated Flattery.

As the Duke of Wellington was standing one day opposite his house in Piccadilly, waiting an opportunity to cross the street, an entire stranger to him offered his arm to the Duke to assist him in crossing. Although Wellington hated assistance of any kind, he accepted the stranger's arm, and the latter having secured a passage by signing to the drivers of the vehicles to stop, conducted the great man in safety across the street. "I thank you, sir," said the Duke, releasing his arm and proceeding to his house door. But the stranger, instead of moving on, raised his hat and delivered himself to the following effect: "Your grace, I have passed a long and not uneventful life, but never did I hope to reach the day when I might be of the slightest assistance to the greatest man that ever lived." "Don't be a — fool," responded the Duke, and he turned on his heel.

FRENCH AND ENGLISH DESIGNS FOR MID-SUMMER WAISTCOATS.

LATEST STYLES IN SAILOR HATS.

ONLY FINE STRAW IS ADMISSIBLE AND THE BAND MUST BE ADJUSTABLE.

WIDE-BRIMMED SAILORS.

The precise young person who feels that her sailor hat must not vary a hair's breadth from the approved shape will this year find it more difficult to be out of style than in it. There is no law in regard to the absolute proportions of the sailor's brim and crown. And if the leaders of fashion and makers of hats cannot agree, the mere follower of fashions cannot hope to avoid perplexity. There are two shapes, however, that lead all the others, and each is claimed by its designer to be the only correct shape.

One of these has a low crown and broad brim. The other has a high crown and narrow brim. Both are represented in the illustrations. Both are very neat and both very stylish, so the tailor-made girl has merely to choose as to which is the more becoming. In the details of the hat, however, there is less latitude to choice. The mistake must not be made of getting a rough straw. Sailors are made in rough straw and the uninitiated may buy them, but the initiated will not. A fine straw, with heavy double brim is the only admissible form.

BICYCLE SAILOR.

The band is another delicate matter. For ordinary wear this must be black. To wear with a white gown it must be white. And for the many intermediate occasions which present themselves during the summer there are hundreds of dainty patterns in striped ribbons, any one of which is allowable. Every girl of course knows that her hat band should be adjustable, so that she may change it as often as she pleases. Bands striped in two or three colors are much worn, but the newest thing is a band of black, edged at top and bottom with a tiny rim of color. The bow is perfectly square and even.

NEWEST RIBBON BAND.

Another variety of sailor is the "bicycle hat." This is different from the others in having a narrower brim and a wider band. It is made of large straw, loosely plaited, leaving frequent perforations. Usually it is red, brown or blue, to match the bicycle suit, and has two little quills of the same color stuck in under the bow at the side.

Predictions of the downfall of the sailor have been persistent, but futile. It is worn precisely as much as ever, and still remains the correct accompaniment for almost any outdoor costume. And no milliner's achievement that the summer girl can adopt will make her any more enticing that the perennially popular sailor she has worn for so many years.

"VEAL CURE" FOR SUNBURN.

Damaged Complexions May Be Remedied by Applying Veal Cutlet.

The cry which arises annually from every seashore, country and mountain resort in the land has this year met with a new response. Pasty lotions of more or less harmless properties are no longer advocated as a cure for sunburn. Complexions which have been given a crimson tinge by too long exposure to summer suns now find their speediest cure in a veal cutlet. The "veal cure," as it is called, has leaped into a popularity which indicates that it is more than ordinarily potent.

Butchers at the summer watering-places have ceased to wonder at the loud demand for veal. They know that when the summer girl returns from her sea bath, walk or drive, her first thought is for the veal cutlet that shall preserve the delicacy of her complexion. The proper procedure is to have the cutlets shaved into very thin slices. These raw slices must then be carefully laid all over the face, and lightly kept in place by passing narrow tape or ribbon over them. The result is not becoming, but that is unimportant. The victim then retires to a perfectly darkened room and lies down for at least half an hour. When the veal becomes warm by contact with the face, it should be turned over and again applied.

When the face has ceased to burn the veal may be removed and the face gently washed with elder flower water. The face should not be again exposed to the sun the same day, and no soap should be used on it for a day or two. When these precautions are observed the veal cure is guaranteed to be effectual.

FROGS AS ORNAMENTS.

Used on Dresses by Women Ordinarily of Shaky Nerves.

Card cases and pocketbooks of frog-green leather, with gold clasps, are used by the devotees of fashion.

Women who would die if touched by a live frog are seen clasping these frog-like presentments with a life or death clutch. Frogs are even used to trim a whole frock. Frogs are at the collar band, again at the belt, and again at the side panels of the skirt, and, of course, there is a great jumping frog upon the hat.

Household Topics.

A new way of toughening glass or china has been devised by some household benefactor. Fold the delicate pieces in cloths to prevent their knocking together and place them in a large copper kettle, in enough cold water to cover them entirely. Bring this water to a boil, let it boil for some time, then lift the pan off the fire and do not touch its contents until the water is perfectly cold.

Before heavy garments are put away for the summer they should be thoroughly sunned and aired. Shake out every fold and expose the clothes to light and air for at least one day. Then attend to any neglected rips and rents, fold the clothes carefully, sprinkle generously with camphor and put in a perfectly tight cedar chest or closet.

Stains upon the marble and grease spots upon carpets and other woolens may all be removed by the magical cleaning agent called fuller's earth. To remove a grease spot mix with boiling water a paste of magnesia and fuller's earth, combined in equal parts, then apply this and let dry. When it is hard brush the powder away and the grease will have disappeared. Fuller's earth and benzine will take stains from marble.

A Butterfly Worth $15,000.

It has been only three or four years since the expressions "as pretty as the Hankins butterfly" and "worth as much as the Hankins butterfly" were among the colloquials at Saratoga and other Eastern watering places. The expressions arose in this way: One of the favorites at the places mentioned was a Mrs. Hankins of Chicago, who wore as a jewel a butterfly five and one-half inches long by two and one-half inches wide, made of pure gold, and set with a row of seventy-six brilliant diamonds. Besides this edging of pure gems, there were 124 others of the same kind scattered over the body of the jewel. The gem body of this golden insect was a large Hungarian opal, and the tail was made of emeralds and rubies. Mrs. Hankins valued the ornament at $15,000.

FLOWERS TUCKED IN THE HAIR.

THE SUMMER GIRL OF '96 HAS REVIVED A FASHION OF OUR GRANDMAS.

It's the fashion among the summer girls to wear two or three blossoms tucked in their hair.

Though it is considered a novelty this year the novelty is an old one. Our grandmammas, when they wished to look most coquettish, would put a posey in their hair and then blush as red as its petals. But for years the wearing of natural flowers in the hair has not been considered good form. Ribbons, feather pompons and aigrettes have taken their place.

But the French girls of to-day have agreed that their summer toilet is not complete unless a flower or two rests against their hair, especially when they are gowned for the evening.

And, of course, it is the aim of the American girl to copy her French sisters. Therefore the old fashion is again revived, and the summer girls never looked prettier.

The young woman who has never before attempted wearing flowers in her hair will do well to remember that there is a right and wrong way of arranging them. To obtain the best effect the flowers should look as though they had been tucked in the hair without thought, and in the most careless manner.

This is the way they should look, according to the New York Journal, from which the illustration is taken, but not the way they should be arranged. Great care should be taken not only as to their selection, but the position they occupy in the hair.

The contour of the face must be first considered. If the face is long and rather inclined to be thin, the hair should be dressed low and very full and fluffy over the ears. Three or four flowers may then be worn.

They should be tucked in the hair just above the ear. The French girls say that when you are engaged or married the flowers must be fastened in the hair above the right ear, but if you are an unengaged maiden near the left is their correct place. This rule they are most strict in observing.

The florists at the leading summer resorts are now making up tiny bouquets of flowers, which have been designed especially to be worn in the hair.

The summer young man this year, if he intends to be up to date, will be forced to buy two bouquets at a time instead of one—a large bouquet for the fair summer girl to carry when she is ready for the dance, and a miniature reproduction of it to be tucked in her hair. It is needless to say woe to the young man who sends the maiden of his heart flowers which are unbecoming.

HOW THE SUMMER GIRL DRESSES HER HAIR.

WAISTCOATS NOW FOR WOMEN.

THIS LATEST ARTICLE OF MAN'S ATTIRE BECOMES THE FAIR SEX WELL.

Furbelowed waistcoats are the medium through which the pent-up longings of the tailor-made girl find their expression. It is their mission to relieve the tailor-made gown from severity and to supply a graceful and feminine finish to gowns not in themselves distinctive. And designers have been so successful that even an ugly suit may be made attractive with the addition of a fancy summer waistcoat in lawn or linen.

Among the grass linen waistcoats there are some particularly pretty designs. These are usually made in the blouse pattern, as such thin material could not be arranged otherwise than loosely. Where a bit of brightness is desired the foundation of the waistcoat is of colored satin, sapphire blue being a desirable shade. Over this may be fulled ecru embroidered grass lawn guipure, with high stock collar of the same material. Or, as in one very neat pattern the guipure may be placed over a foundation of the same color and bordered with narrow revers of itself. In another design the waistcoat is of finest grass lawn, with a delicate pattern of Honiton lace extending lengthwise of the front. The grass linen varieties, however, are too many to be enumerated. All are charming, and each will harmonize with almost any style of suit.

An appropriate waistcoat to wear with a duck or linen suit is of fine colored cambric. It has the ordinary full front and a ripple collarette, reaching to the shoulder, edged with Valenciennes lace. The high plaited stock has little lace-edged tufts projecting at either side.

Colored silk forms a background for many of the daintiest waistcoats. Deep rose taffeta was chosen as the foundation for a waistcoat of fine cream Valenciennes lace net, having silk stripes of the same color. Color contrasts are employed with wonderfully good effect in many a novel waistcoat, and the silk lining is a device that modistes have availed themselves of so far as possible.

Amid the profusion of ruffles and embroidery it is perhaps strange that the masculine waistcoat has not been overlooked or forgotten. Yet the trim little tailor-made waistcoat is still seen, and maintains a place from which no amount of furbelows can oust it. The up-to-date pattern is cut rather high in the neck, in contrast to preceding styles, and is finished by a hem rather than by lapels. It is single-breasted, reaches but a very little below the waist, and has a tiny pocket at either side. It is of white duck, linen or crash, it being in far better taste to have plain material than one that is perceptibly spotted or figured. Waistcoats of the same material as the gown are likewise worn, though a front of different stuff gives a more summerish effect.

With the plain style of waistcoat a linen collar and tie is, of course, the only neck arrangement permissible. The ribbon collar fiend should beware of her pet adornment when she has on a stiff new waistcoat. A linen collar, however unbecoming, is the only choice. The adoption of waistcoats by women gives opportunity for solecisms of dress heretofore undreamed of, but the wise woman shows her wisdom in avoiding these.

A WOMAN IN IT.

The Duchess of Fife is the most retiring member of Queen Victoria's family. Princess Maud has nicknamed her "Your Royal Shyness" on this account.

The Cuban revolution has brought forth a poetess to fit the crime. She is Senorita Leonor Perez de la Riva, and, as befits a poetess, is described as a girl of 20 and of rare dazzling beauty.

Mme. de Chevreuse, a representative of one of the noblest families of France, declined the honor of being maid of honor to his sister-in-law, the Queen of Spain. She afterwards became Josephine's dame du palais, but always affected to look down on the imperial court. One day she went to a reception at the Tuileries blazing with diamonds. "What splendid jewels!" remarked Napoleon. "Are they real?" "Mon Dieu, sire, I really don't know, but at any rate they are quite good enough to wear here."

A curious man wants to be told why women pin from left to right; men from right to left. Women button from right to left; men from left to right. Women stir from left to right (their tea, for instance); men from right to left. Women seldom know the difference between a right and left shoe and if a housemaid brings up a man's boots she will nine times out of ten place them so that the points will diverge. Can these peculiarities be explained?

Mme. Boucicaut was first a laundress and the daughter-in-law of a laundress, who married a hatter at Mortagne in Normandy. She was engaged in the laundering department at the Petit St. Thomas mart and found her opportunity in lot sales of damaged silks and odds and ends of machine-made lace. She used at night to make up what she bought at these sales into cravats, jackets and children's frocks according to patterns she studied at the Petit St. Thomas. On her way in the morning to her work she sold them in a market. She did so well that she had soon to get help, and then took a poky shop in the Rue du Bac, where the west entrance to the Bon Marche now stands. The rule was cheapness. Nobody was ever taken in. In the tentative struggles she and her husband learned business without heavy risk. She could not be called an old woman when she died. After giving away nearly £3,000,000 in acts of justice, friendship and benevolence she left a fortune valued at over £7,000,000.

Wearing Tight Gloves.

The wearers of tight gloves will be interested to learn that the woman whose hands and arms are famous for their beauty all wear loose gloves. Bernhardt wears long, loose-wristed gloves, and her white, beautiful hands are among her charms. Miss Terry has a large hand, almost masculine in the strength of its lines, though the fingers are beautifully tapered. Her hand is in proportion with her figure, and she does not squeeze either into tight compresses.

LATEST IDEAS IN FOOTWEAR.

PATENT LEATHER AND WHITE CANVAS IN GREAT DEMAND.

Styles in summer shoes develop in number and complexity according to the increasing demands of the summer girl, and have now reached the point where they may be effectively summarized and understood only in the summer hotel. Here alone one may see every variety of shoe that ingenious dealers have devised or capricious damsel demanded—each worn on the proper occasion and with proper accompaniments. More than ever is it true that there is a shoe for every time and place and that the wearing of any other is a serious social misdemeanor, if not a crime. No woman with the time and money to give the proper attention to her outfit ever dreams of economy in shoes.

Custom has not staled the popularity of the russet shoe. Although the favorite shoe for a half dozen summers past, it still manages to hold its place. It is the shoe most often seen in the fashionable summer hotels. The correct style is of a medium shade of tan, equally removed from a glaring yellow and a dull brown. The toe is gracefully rounded, the pointed toe being wholly out of date. The short straight military heel adds to the common sense appearance of this very popular shoe.

White shoes are made of canvas, hardly at all in kid. Even kid tips are no longer seen. The abuse and vulgarizing of the white shoe have served to lessen its prominence, and to confine its wear to the use for which it was first mentioned, an accessory to a white gown.

For dressy wear, the correct shoe this summer is a patent leather. This is seen in various shapes. A beautiful little patent leather tie, with straight heel, may be bought for $10. The patent leather slipper, with the very high Louis Quinze heel, is one of the prettiest articles in the summer girl's wardrobe. It may be decorated with a trim little box bow, which is a new fancy, or an elaborate buckle, costing from $7 to $20, is still more in favor.

For mountain climbing, boots of exaggerated width and heaviness are worn. They are usually made of russet leather, with a very wide last, thick sole and masculine cut. They are laced, closely fitted, and will resist any obstacle that the ordinary mountain has to offer.

Bicycle shoes have usurped the popularity that tennis shoes formerly enjoyed, and the vicinity of the summer hotel is filled with attractive styles in wheeling footgear. The light-weight russet boot, reaching nearly to the knee, with flexible foot and light sole, is the most approved fashion. The canvas legging has seen its day.

Kitchen Hints.

Ivory knife handles may be whitened and kept so if they are occasionally soaked in alum water. The alum water must boil first and then cool. After the knives have remained in the water an hour remove them and brush with a nail brush, and then allow them to dry slowly in a wet linen towel.

• • •

Vanilla extract may be made at home by putting in a bottle two vanilla beans, cut fine; cover them with half a pint of alcohol and half a pint of clear water. In two weeks this very inexpensive and satisfactory extract will be ready for use.

• • •

The oilcloth on the kitchen floor is a frequent source of perplexity, yet there is a simple way of keeping it clean and bright. Go over it twice a week with a flannel wet in warm water. Then wipe the floor perfectly dry, and afterwards rub it well with skim milk.

• • •

A mixture of chalk, pummice stone and common soda well pounded and passed through a sieve, then made into a paste with water, is excellent for removing stains from marble. It should be rubbed over the marble, left for a few hours. Then washed off with suds and the surface polished

Bath for the Baby.

Have the water warm, not hot, then throw in baby's bath satchet. This is a small flannel affair, containing a mixture of bran, crushed Castile soap, orris powder and almond meal. It renders the water soft and fragrant and imparts a delicacy to the skin. Now put baby in. After a few minutes' ablutions deposit him in a large square of Turkish toweling, which is laid over your lap. Wrap him closely in it, thus shutting out all air. In this you can rub and cuddle him to your heart's content till he is nearly dry. After unfolding, rub him briskly with a dry towel, powder, and dress him immediately. There will be no danger of his taking cold when bathed in this fashion.

THIS MONKEY DIED FOR LOVE.

ROBBED OF HIS MATE, HE STOLE A ROPE AND COMMITTED SUICIDE.

Just for love this monkey died. Like a miserable, love-lorn human, jilted by the one he adored, poor Franko hanged himself with a rope and died. Rather than face life without his charmer he decided to "cross the range."

HE DIED FOR LOVE.

Franko was a common, ring-tailed Brazilian monkey. For several months he had been an attraction of the monkey house at the Glen Island No. 9 Zoological Garden. With a score of other monkeys he swung from rings by his hands, feet and tail, caught nuts thrown to him and otherwise amused the visitors. Franko was the liveliest monkey in the cage. He could do more tricks and do them better than any other monkey there, and his incessant chatter showed that he possessed a happy spirit.

In the cage with Franko was a female monkey. To her Franko was the most devoted. He gave her the choicest nuts and morsels of food, and was even known to fight other monkeys to secure delicacies for her. His suit apparently prospered, for the maiden did not say him nay. Thus things were going along nicely when a hard-hearted keeper stopped the course of love's young dream and removed Franko to another cage.

This separation was made last week and immediately Franko's spirit underwent a change.

This was Tuesday night. Wednesday morning the body of the broken-hearted monkey was found dangling at the end of a rope in the cage.

When discovered his heart was still beating and his body was warm. The rope was cut and restoratives were applied, in vain, and soon Franko was a corpse—another victim of love.

Had he but known—but why speak of what might have been? Franko concluded that the future held nothing for him and he resolved to die and end all his misery.

They have a sacred cow at the Glen Island Zoo. Like other bovines she likes grass. It has been the custom to tie a rope around her left forefoot each morning, and tie the other end of the rope to the monkey's cage or some other stable object. Then the cow could graze.

Tuesday the sacred cow had been lassoed, and when she was again placed in her pen the rope was left to be ready for the next day. It happened that the other end of the rope was attached to the cage in which the love-lorn monkey was cursing his fate.

Early Wednesday morning Franko discovered a rope near his cage and it suggested a way to end his misery. He pulled in into the cage, passed it over a bar at the top, placed the noose around his tiny neck and swung off into eternity. There was no "dull, sickening thud," no black cap, but the hanging was a success. The verdict was that Franko met death from strangulation, the result of his own efforts.

The object of Franko's love and for whom he died does not know his fate and she would not be likely to care much if she did. Monkeys are fickle and there are other monkeys to worship at her shrine. But she will never have another lover so faithful as poor Franko, the suicide.

PRUNES FOR HER SOUL.

THIS MAN FEEDS HIS CHILDREN ON PRUNES FOR THEIR MORAL WELFARE.

Henry Krause of Oakland, Cal., believes that prunes as diet have a distinctly moral influence. As a cure for a tendency toward waywardness in girls he thinks there is nothing like them. One of Dickens' characters believed in the supposed virtues of the words prunes and prisms as a means, if constantly repeated, of giving a pleasing formation to the mouths of young ladies, but it remained for Mr. Krause to discover the effect of prunes on the soul.

Mr. Krause has a family of six children. They live on prunes and figs exclusively, and they only get them once a day. One would not imagine this was a fattening diet, but the children are as fat as butter, and as full of spirits as young colts.

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children of Oakland heard of the way Krause was alleged to be starving his children. The secretary with the best intentions proceeded to investigate. She found it was true the children were not allowed to eat beefsteak and eggs and pies and the other edibles the average child thrives on, and that they only got one meal a day of prunes. But as they were fat, apparently healthy and strong and happy Mr. Krause was allowed to go on feeding his children in his own way.

Some time ago a daughter of Mr. Krause was betrayed under promise of marriage, it is said. The father concluded he had not been strict enough in enforcing his regimen on her and said the only way was to keep her strictly to a prune diet hereafter. His idea was to let the past go and start anew. This savored slightly of locking the stable door after the horse was stolen, but better late than never is his motto. So long as his daughter sticks to a prune diet he is satisfied she will be a model girl hereafter.

Mr. Krause indulges in other little eccentricities also. He says he expects to live a long time on his fruit diet, but all the same he has bought his coffin and had it prepared to receive his body. He believes in taking time by the forelock. Other great men have done likewise in the matter of coffins. Li Hung Chang carries his around with him wherever he goes, and in China it is deemed a delicate attention for children to buy coffins for their parents, not as an intimation that their permanent absence would be desirable, but to console them with the assurance that they can bank on having a decent funeral.

Mr. Krause resents any interference with his plans. He says it is nobody's business if he raises his children on prunes and buys his coffin ahead of time. As proof of the healthfulness of a diet of prunes he points to his 5-year-old daughter, who, he declares, is stronger for her age and can outwalk any other child in Alameda County.

A Century's Deaths.

The French medical journal called La Practician says that an average of 4,847,500,000 persons die in the world during each century.

A COW THAT CLIMBS TREES.

IT WAS FOUND IN ONE AND NONE CAN TELL HOW IT GOT THERE.

Harrodsburg, Ky., has a wonder in its famous high bridge over the Kentucky River. It has another and more recent one in the Jersey cow of Farmer John Peters.

Mr. Peters lives on the pike a mile south of the town. His Jersey cow has heretofore behaved in a most exemplary manner, giving down its milk twice daily without protest, and giving no evidence of undue gayety.

But one evening the cow did not come up as usual to be milked. She did not come to time next morning, and Mr. Peters went to look for her. He asked the neighbors, but no one had seen her. Finally he found bossie up a tree. There she was tightly wedged in the forks of a tree unable either to come down or climb higher.

Mr. Peters was surprised. But his surprise did not bring the cow down, so he procured a rope and derrick and the aid of several of the town boys. It was pie for them to assist in such a novel work of rescue. The work was interfered with to some extent by the boys stopping to wonder and speculate on how the cow got up so high, and to say they'd be hanged—or words to that effect—if they ever see such a cow before. Finally a rope was secured about the cow's person, the derrick was brought into play, and the venturemose cow was restored to Mother Earth.

Little else is talked of now about Harrodsburg but how Peter's cow got into the forks of the tree. She was eight feet from the ground. No one can advance a reasonable theory. It was declared by experts to be too high for the "beatenist fence-jumping cow" to jump, and the cow had no wings. There is an old conundrum, "Why is a cow like a whale?" And the answer is "because neither of them can climb a tree." Peter's cow is built on the same general plan as other bovines, and the climbing theory was instantly scouted. If the episode had occurred a hundred years ago it could very easily have been accounted for, but the last of the known witches was burned at Salem a long time ago.

As this occurred in Kentucky the skeptical may be tempted to make irrelevant remarks about the effects of old Bourbon and the imagination. But no such flippancy is to be tolerated in this case. Mr. Peters is way up in the ranks of the Good Templars, and has been a consistent member of the order for 30 years. Besides, he is a church member in good standing. To clinch the thing, he went before a notary and took oath to finding the cow up a tree as set forth. Besides, the derrick and rope are still in existence as evidence.

The cow has been watched closely since, but has shown no disposition to climb, fly, or jump into a tree. Politics and the silver question have become back-number topics of conversation since. Juries of view have looked at the tree, and all sorts of theories have been advanced, but the mystery remains unsolved.

SELF HYPNOTIZED FOR A WEEK.

A HINDOO FAKIR GOES TO SLEEP IN LONDON AND WAKES UP AT BUDAPEST.

To the student of hynotism and autosuggestion there is no more interesting study than the sleeping fakirs of India. These men go into a sleep which lasts for many days. For years their ability to do it was doubted by all Europe.

During the recent Hungarian Millenial Exposition at Budapest a fine opportunity was presented to learn as much about the fakirs and their remarkable industry as they will permit any one not of their own caste to know. The management of the exposition engaged three of them.

The fakirs were in London at the time of their engagement, and arrangements were made with one of them to enter the cataleptic sleep before leaving London, and to be transported in that state to the exposition, where he was to be awakened. He was to remain asleep a week.

The preparations for the long sleep were simple. The fakirs sat down together to a meal which consisted only of a little milk.

Then the one who was to go to sleep before the journey to Budapest was begun withdrew from the room and arrayed himself in the garment which he was to wear until he should again awaken. It was a loose, flowing garment of light silk that enveloped his whole form and reached to his feet.

In a niche in one corner of the room rested a coffin made entirely of glass. The glass was thick and heavy and calculated to withstand the strain of the journey. The top was removed from the coffin, the fakir entered it and stretched himself on the bottom on his back.

One of the attendants wrapped the fakir's legs about with a silk cover. The fakir fixed his gaze on the tip of his nose and continued to gaze in that direction. It made him appear cross-eyed.

IN A TRANCE IN LONDON—AWAKENED IN BUDAPEST.

At that point one of the other fakirs stepped beside the coffin and laid his hands on the forehead of the one within. The eyes of the fakir in the glass coffin began to stare, and in about two minutes he was in a deep sleep. Then the coffin was closed and prepared for the journey.

The coffin containing the sleeping fakir with the attendants and all those interested, journeyed together from London to Budapest.

Within a few hours the coffin was opened. A physician thrust a needle into the arm of the fakir, without eliciting any sign of life on the part of the sleeper. Several other tests, not so severe, were made to ascertain if the Hindoo was really in a cataleptic state or only shamming. The entire company was agreed that there was no shamming about it.

Finally, after one of the natives had murmured something which he said were the suggestions for awakening the sleeper, the latter began to breathe perceptibly, and although for some time he suffered considerably, he came around all right. His name is Bhin-jen-Pratley, and he is a native of Lahore.

COLORED BOY'S WONDERFUL MEMORY

EMPLOYED IN A BOOK STORE HE KNOWS THE LOCATION OF EVERY BOOK.

Phenomenal memories are sometimes developed by constant practice, even by those not of extraordinary intelligence. For many years there was a colored man at the Southern Hotel who officiated as hat caretaker at the dining-room door. It was said of him that no matter how many guests there were he would hand each one his hat as he came out. An almost incredible performance in this line is attributed to him. On one occasion a party of Knights Templar were guests. Each wore a helmet exactly alike except, of course, as to size. Nevertheless the man gave each Sir Knight his right hat, without a single exception.

A colored boy named William Ash, who lives in New York, has developed a marvelous memory. He is employed in Putnam's large book store, and his memory enables him to earn a large salary. He has grown up in the book store and it has taken him seven years to acquire the knowledge which gives value to his services.

This little fellow knows every book in this immense stock, and is often called upon even by members of the firm for information.

William's position is quite unique. It has always been a problem in this store as to how to arrange an immense stock of books so that a customer could be served without delay. The plan has recently been tried of keeping the books on a long gallery running along the walls. This brought the books within easy reach, but it took the most experienced clerk some time to locate a book in this enormous library.

William was tried in this very difficult position, and to the surprise of all he did the work of three experienced men. It is the custom for a salesman on the floor to call out the name of a book to the attendant on the balcony above. William, with his shrewd little black face leaning over the rail, never misses hearing an order, and then, in less time than it takes to tell about it, he darts at the great lines of books and returns every time with the right volume. He frequently attracts quite a crowd of spectators.

This work is even more difficult than it looks. There are more than 5,000 books on the balcony shelves, and they are all classified in a very complicated way.

It requires, besides, considerable knowledge of general literature not to mistake the orders which are shouted to him. He must, for instance, know the difference when one salesman calls out "Mill on Liberty" and another "Mill on the Floss."

William supports a widowed mother and lives very comfortably on the income which his rare gift of memory insures for him.

The ability to keep an immense mass of detail at one's finger-tips is acquired, these memory experts say, only by long training. It is more than a trick and requires years of discipline.

DEVICES KNOWN AS CAT TEASERS.

THE PADDLE, CURTAIN ROLLER, AND BATTERY TO KEEP PUSSY AWAY AT NIGHT.

Ingenious people who are troubled with the meous and caterwauls of cats at night have invented various methods of having fun with the pussies and at the same time keeping them off their premises. These devices are known as "cat teasers."

A successful cat teaser consists of three flat boards about five inches wide, placed with the long edges together, so that a three-bladed paddle-wheel is formed. The paddle-wheel is about three feet long. A number of sections are placed end to end until the top of the fence is covered.

It is impossible for a cat to climb into a yard protected with these cat teasers. The moment puss, having climbed up the fence, places her foot against one of these flukes (and there is no other foothold) it recedes under her weight, and the next fluke coming around gives her a whack which generally succeeds in knocking her to the ground. No cat ever tries it a second time.

Another simple device is to arrange spring curtain rollers end to end, along the fence.

The cat that tries to climb over that fence generally finds it impossible to gain foothold on the slippery rollers. The owner of the contrivance declares he has seen cats cling to a fence and pat the roller with their claws, finally giving it up with a yowl of disgust.

There is but one objection to this. If the cat lands on the top of the roller it is left to chance on which side it will fall. If it falls inside will spend the night in futile efforts to get out again.

Spikes set closely together worry pussy, and broken glass on brick walls are decidedly uncomfortable for either standing or sitting on to enjoy a concert. A few strands of barbed wire stretched along the top of the fence have been found to be very useful as cat discouragers. It is calculated to make the fur fly.

A New Yorker has invented an electric cat chaser.

This man has placed two long strips of copper along the top of his fence, taking care that they did not touch.

Then he nailed on a triangular strip of wood between the two copper strips. When a cat walks along that fence it is compelled to do so with two feet on each copper wire, the triangular piece of wood preventing it doing otherwise. The strips of copper are connected to a dynamo.

It is one of the amusements of that man's life to sit up all night and wait for cats. He has even invited a party of friends to sit up with him. He claims to have discovered one scientific fact from the manipulation of his machine. It is that cats can, under certain conditions, like more human prima-donnas and tenors, be made to strike high C.

He says he has listened to the ordinary tone register cats usually have and then he has turned on the current. Immediately there has been a more rapid and continued rise in the howling scale.

Another remarkable fact is that where two cats are concerned in the electric shock each seems to blame its misery upon the other, and they always attempt to wipe out the insult in blood, which is disastrous for the contestants, as the short circuit of the current become all the more shocking.

The most popular cat-teasers are those which can be used for other purposes as well as for teasing cats. A shoe, for instance, is a good combination cat-teaser and footgear. The bootjack has grown venerable in the service, so have bottles, which have the further merit of breaking if they miss the cats. There are scores of household articles that can be used. In fact, any old thing is good enough to throw at a cat.

IT RUNS IN THE FAMILY.

Ten Girls in a Family of Twenty-One All Made Runaway Marriages.

A Henry County, Kentucky, girl, who was married in Jeffersonville, Ind., the other day, is the youngest daughter in a family of twenty-one children, and all of her ten sisters have eloped to the same town in the last three years and have been married by the same magistrate. The bride is but 19 years of age, and stated that she had heard so much of the 'Squire in question she would allow no one else to marry her, and she eloped in opposition to her parents' wishes and despite the protests of her husband. She embraced the 'Squire as soon as the ceremony was over.

THE COW AND THE ANACONDA.

FRANK CANZ TELLS OF THE STRANGE THINGS HE SAW IN VENEZUELA.

This is a true story of a cow and an anaconda. It happened in Venezuela. Mr. Frank Canz of St. Louis, who has recently returned from that country, is authority for it.

They have anacondas in that country

THE ANACONDA BROKE IN TWO.

which are from 50 to 60 feet long. Mr. Canz did not measure them with a tape line, but his estimate is approximately correct. There are also cows in Venezuela. Their product is found to be very useful in the manufacture of milk punch, milk shakes and things.

The anacondas object to cows. When the cows go to the river to drink, sometimes an anaconda will grab them by the nose and attempt to pull them into the drink. Sometimes the anaconda goes broke at the game, according to Mr. Canz. There is a great deal of the human in the anaconda. He dislikes to be broke, but sometimes he tries to bite off more than he can chew—like man does—and gets broke anyway, when he least expects it.

Mr. Canz' story is of a cow which belonged to a friend of his. The cow went down to the river one day thinking no evil, when a large anaconda seized her by the nose. The cow resisted so vigorously, and the big snake had such a saving hold with its tail that as the cow backed off the snake's body stretched like an india rubber band and finally broke short off. The cow returned home with three feet of anaconda hanging to her nose. That part of the serpent was dead, but it had died so suddenly it had no time to disengage its teeth.

Mr. Canz saw this himself. That it is true there can be no doubt, because he drew a picture of it from memory, from which the accompanying illustration was reproduced by a Sunday Post-Dispatch artist.

Mr. Canz says that in Venezuela garden sass is cultivated in boxes raised several feet from the ground. The boxes are 8x10 feet in size. They are supported by four legs, which rest in pools of water. This is to prevent a voracious species of red ants of great size from eating every green thing in sight. The red ants of Venezuela are like the Weary Willies of America. They have no use for water, and always carry a large, well developed appetite about their persons. They do not eat the rank vegetation which abounds everywhere, but being discriminating insects they eat only nourishing vegetables. The box idea is a good one anyway in other respects. After gardening at the boxes, the gardener does not feel that his spine is permanently warped, as is the case with the ground gardening familiar to home gardeners.

Mr. Canz tells of tarantulas as big as a man's head, and the Goliath Beetle, which is eight inches long. He is going back to Venezuela next month. He will take with him an entomological outfit, and expects to capture several sets of specimens of the insects of the country. One set he will present to the museum of the State Normal School, and another to the professional bugologist of the Post-Dispatch.

REPLEVINED A CORPSE.

It Was Petrified and Several Claimants Want to Own It.

Minnesota courts will soon be called upon to unravel a tangled web of facts and law. Some men digging a ditch near the town of Bloomer unearthed a well-preserved petrified corpse on land belonging to G. H. McPherson. They loaded their find on a wagon and took it to town, where they began exhibiting it for money.

The show proved profitable and Mr. McPherson set up a claim for the stone cadaver on the ground that it was found on his property. He secured a writ of replevin and the Sheriff took possession of the petrification. Finally the original claimants gave a bond, regained possession of their find and resumed their tour.

It seems probable that the body is that of a Frenchman named Lecount, who was murdered a score of years ago and buried near the spot where the petrified body was found. The Frenchman had a pretty wife, and in a quarrel about her a traveler shot him. He has two sons living, and it is said when the case comes before the courts for final disposition they will assert their claim, which will complicate matters more than ever.

QUEER PEOPLE, STRANGE FREAKS and ODDITIES.

THE IDAHO DEVIL IS WELL NAMED.

HE EATS CROPS, IS A CANNIBAL, AND BITES THE HONEST FARMER.

This is the Idaho devil, and he looks the part. It is playing the devil with the crops of the Western farmer.

The Idaho devil is so called by the Idaho farmers. Formerly he used to do most of his deviltry in Mexico, but he has lately migrated into the United States in such large numbers that the farmers have appealed to the Government, and Uncle Sam has sent one of his bugologists to investigate the new pest and formulate plans for its ultimate destruction and undoing.

WIDMANN
WIDMANN
A BITER AND A CANNIBAL.

This insect is not strictly a vegetarian. He eats up anything green which he comes across, but he is a cannibal, too, and kills and eats insects which are physically unable to resist the attacks of this murderous buccaneer.

The picture shows the insect as it is, and also a magnified view of the head, showing the formidable jaws. If molested the Idaho devil will attack man. He objects to being forcibly removed from vegetation, and is capable of biting through the thickest gloves.

These crickets live in holes in the sand and are carnivorous of habit. They have enormous heads and their jaws are so powerful that they are easily able to bite through an ordinary glove. Cannibals they are, and other insects nearly related to them are their favorite prey. The Mexicans believe their "nip" is death. But this is a mistake, doubtless arising in part from their fierce aspect. Still it is bad enough to have a pest that not only eats everything within reach, but will also take a bite out of your fingers or legs if you bother him.

The Idaho devil is a powerful noise maker, but has no voice. His alleged chirp is produced by rubbing his wings together. He lives in a hole with little galleries underground, and in front of his house he builds a small platform, on which he throws his refuse. All day and all night he sits at the entrance to his home and performs operatic selections with his wings. The male and the female live apart, each in its own house. Squabbles are frequent, and they fight so fiercely with their hind legs and powerful jaws, armed with serrated teeth, that the combatants frequently suffer the most dreadful mutilation. They never go more than an inch or two away from their burrows, which they defend with the utmost ferocity.

This Hailfall Was a Windfall.

Hailstones the size of pigeon eggs, according to W. G. McKinnell of Melita, Manitoba, killed 105 Canada geese during a heavy thunderstorm recently near Sauris, Manitoba. A farmer named Coulter found a large flock of the geese killed or disabled after the storm, and after killing the living ones with a stick went home and sold the lot at 50 cents each. He took in $52.50 for his windfall.

A Braying Colt.

Arthur Robinson of Wallacetown, Ky., has a colt which is something of a curiosity. In some respects [illegible] resembles a mule, and brays like a mu[illegible] also neighs like a horse colt.

A PETRIFIED HAM.

It Was Found Near Somerset, Ky., by Workmen While Excavating.

A petrified ham for which $500 has been refused was unearthed last week near Somerset, Ky.

J. W. Goodwin, a storekeper, had a force of men at work excavating a foundation for a new building, and while digging with a pick ax one of them struck something which he took to be a huge piece of rock.

It was removed from its bed and was found to be an ordinary ham, which had once belonged to a grown hog.

It was carefully scrubbed and cleaned, and the pores in what was once a porker's skin were found to be as plainly marked as those on a new smoked ham of the best quality.

Mr. Goodwin placed the curiosity on exhibition, and on the second day was offered $500 for it. He declined to sell.

The spot where it was found was the site of a cabin seventy years ago, and this is supposed to be a sample of the "good sweet ham" sewed up in the days when Andy Jackson was in his prime. The rise in its value will suggest a boom in the petrified ham industry.

FEAT OF A TARHEEL HEN.

Laid an Immense Egg in Which Was Another Egg of Usual Size.

Phil L. Spruill, a resident of Columbia, N. C., owns a hen that deserves a reward. She is a common-looking fowl of a Scotch Brahma breed and cackles contentedly when she has laid an egg. The other day she left one in the nest. It was a veritable Jumbo among eggs, measuring five and a quarter inches around one way and eight and one-half inches the other.

Mr. Spruill concluded to save the shell, so he broke holes in each end in order to blow out the contents. Then he discovered that there was another egg inside of the big shell. The inner egg was about the usual size and was perfect in every way. The two shells have excited much interest in Columbia, where they were placed on exhibition. There is no record that Mrs. Brahma cackled longer or louder than usual over the double egg.

HORNS ON HER FEET.

A Cow Which Has Six Horns on Various Parts of Her Body.

This cow was most liberally endowed by nature in the matter of horns. In a freakish mood Dame Nature not only gave her the usual number of horns on the head, but also one on each hoof besides.

HORNS ON HER HOOFS.

The cow had no particular use for horns on its hoofs. They are of no service to her, and rather impede locomotion. She cannot use them for tossing purposes, and they are of no earthly value to any one except to the cow's owner, who places a large additional value on her because of them.

The cow is a Texas product. Her owner, knowing the predilection of Mr. Hannaman of St. Louis for freaks, wanted him to buy her, but the price was too high. She is held by the owner at $500.

QUEER PEOPLE WHO LIVE IN TREES.

NATIVES OF NEW GUINEA WHO LOOK DOWN UPON THE REST OF MANKIND.

Man was indubitably at one period of his existence an arboreal animal. He had much to do with "the trees of the garden." In some places and as represented by some races he still lives among them.

The natives of New Guinea climb like monkeys and travel for long distances from one tree to another without descending to the ground. The birds build little fairylike cabins on the ground, but the people construct their houses in the tops of the tallest forest trees. First a native, having climbed the great trunk of the teak or cedar or oak tree he has selected, begins by cutting off some of the branches the right length to support a platform of bamboo on which his home is to rest. You would wonder how he could do anything with the tools he uses if you should see them. He has no saw or steel-edged ax, but only a sort of tomahawk made of stone and knives of bone or hard wood. When, however, he has managed to get the limbs of his tree so cut and fashioned as to support his house, his hardest work is done.

The house itself is soon built and is made of bamboo strips and thatched with palm leaves. All parts are firmly lashed together with strips of rattan palm, a very tough vine used by natives in place of ropes. It is not a large house, though it sometimes contains several rooms, but it is a safe and secure retreat for the women and children in case of a sudden attack by hostile tribes.

This house is reached from the ground by a long ladder or inclined plane, made of woven vines. In case an enemy appears the ladder is drawn up, and the man and his family and the pig are safe within the house. The elevation not only secures the household from wild beasts and from ants that roam the country, seeking what they may devour, but also from disease germs, which, like those of yellow fever, do not rise above a certain level. The breeze, too, rocks the house gently, like a cradle, and sets the fresh air into circulation, making it delightfully refreshing after the sultry heats below.

If you should climb the long ladder and peep in at the door, you will find the family, perhaps, all asleep or sitting about the floor eating yams, cocoanuts and bananas, and sharing them with their pet pigs, parrots or poultry. You will find there no pictures, toys or playthings, such as even the poorest children among us possess; no music and no books, no furniture in the room, not even a bed and no mats on the floor.

Many a ture built nest is constructed with more art and is more comfortable for the little ones who are born in it, and is far prettier than the rude huts of the wild men of New Guinea.

AFTER A LIVING MASTODON.

Prof. Dyche of the Kansas University Gone to Alaska to Look for One.

The recent departure of Prof. L. L. Dyche of the Kansas University has given rise to several stories as to his destination. Some have asserted that he was bound for Greenland, where he proposed to secure the large meteorite which Lieut. Perry claims to have first seen.

To a correspondent of the Chicago Record Prof. Dyche said that his destination was Alaska, and that while there he would try to learn something of the truth of the stories which are told of a living mastodon in the upper valley of the Yukon River.

Tusks of the finest ivory have been found there, and of the circular form peculiar to mastodons. Recent letters from Alaska say that the meat of a mastodon was brought into Circle City by hunters who asserted that they killed the animal. The meat had the thick hide and the long hair of the mastodon, but as none of it was preserved scientists are not convinced that it was the flesh of a mastodon.

While it is not disputed that mastodons once lived in Alaska, it is thought doubtful if any are now alive. Even the existence of the flesh would not prove the existence of the living animal, as the body of one might be preserved for centuries in the icy fastnesses of that frigid region.

THE FLYING FROG.

A Queer Batrachian Found by Explorer Wallace in Borneo.

An interesting and little known species of frogs has been discovered by Mr. Wallace in Borneo. It has been popularly called the "flying frog," from the fact that it has toes of great length, and these are fully webbed to the tips. If the animal wishes to descend from the top of a high tree it has only to make the leap, and by spreading out its toes it converts its feet into four veritable parachutes, and thus this little aerial batrachian reaches terra firma in safety.

Among the most curious types are the tree frogs, and Gibson says that these "are readily distinguished from all others by having the ends of their toes dilated into knobs or disks, generally provided with a sticky secretion, by means of which they can cling to the leaves and branches of trees. They are small, elegant and exceedingly active creatures, the males possessing loud voices, of which they make copious use during the breeding season and on approach of rain." Frogs have from remote times been regarded as weather prophets, and at the present day, in some parts of Germany, the European tree frog (hyla arborea) is used as a barometer. A few of them are placed in a tall bottle provided with miniature ladders, the steps of which they ascend during fine weather, seeking the bottom again at the approach of rain.

Astronomical structures of a variety of kinds are characteristic of different species of frogs, having to do with the voice organs. So it is that many croak, some chirp and some almost bellow. Many emit noises most disagreeable to all ears, while others give vent to sounds that under some circumstances are quite enjoyable.

THE BIRD OF DEATH.

Said to Be the Only Feathered Biped Whose Bite Is Venomous.

When it is desired by writers on natural history to locate some particularly weird monster, it is credited to New Guinea. The latest acquisition to the world's store of freak birds is the Rjir N'Oooh, or "bird of death," described as "the only venomous bird as yet discovered."

It is about the size of a pigeon, slothful in its habits, can fly but a few feet and is easily caught. Its bite is said to cause excruciating pain, loss of sight and lockjaw. The body of the victim soon swells to enormous proportions, and turns blue. No person bitten by this bird has ever recovered, and death ensues after a few hours of agony.

Silk From Fish Eggs.

A French chemist has recently discovered that eggs of certain species of fish are enveloped in veritable silken cocoons. Since the learned Frenchman began his experiments in this line (in 1894) he has found seven different species of fish that produce eggs from which a fine quality of silk may be woven.

This Sheep Beats the Record.

Mr. J. F. Engle, living near Winchester, Ky., has a ewe that bids fair to make him a lot of money. It is just an ordinary mountain ewe, but as a breeder it has no equal. In March, 1895, this ewe dropped four lambs; in February of this year she dropped one lamb, and to cap the climax last Thursday she dropped four lambs, that are all living and doing well. This makes nine lambs inside of fifteen months, and is the best record of which we have heard.

LAYS ALL FREAK EGGS.

A Hen Which Has a New Surprise for Her Owner Every Day.

John H. Stevens of Providence, R. I., has the freakiest of freak hens—or if the hen is not a freak she does nothing but lay freak eggs.

Mr. Stevens' hen is a big Brahma.

The first departure from the customs of a well-regulated "biddy" was the laying of double-yolked eggs of extraordinary size. Then eggs were laid with fancy fluted and marked shells. The next variation was an egg without any yolk, which was followed by one all yolk and no white. This would appear to terminate the freak programme, but the big Brahma was equal to the emergency, and she dropped a double egg, about 2½ inches long and 2 inches in diameter. It was rather longer and of less diameter than the ordinary egg, with a shell of translucent character, through which enough light was permitted to penetrate to disclose that the internal economy of the "fruit" was far out of the common run of eggs. The larger end of the egg was occupied entirely by the white. Near the small end there was a filament which completely separated the yolk from the white.

THE BIDDY HERSELF.

THE FANCY FLUTED SHELL.

THE DOUBLE TRANSPARENT EGG.

The yolk was scarcely larger than a good sized pea. The covering of the egg, for it could hardly be called a shell, considering that it had the appearance and consistency of pliable parchment, was tough enough to hold the whole together, but by slight manipulation it was broken, and so the egg was lost to science and to the collectors of Nature's freaks.

EGG WITH DOUBLE YOLK.

Much notoriety was achieved by the big Brahma through the laying of this egg, and she has proudly produced another. This is covered with the same kind of a soft shell, but consists of two otherwise perfect eggs, the two being connected with a band of the same material as the shell and being a part of the same.

CURIOUS FREAK EGG.

HEAD WRONG SIDE UP.

This Chicken Has to Turn Acrobat to Pick Up Its Food.

Here is one of the queerest freak chickens ever hatched. The owner of it is Mrs. George Hunt of Pedrichton, N. J. There is nothing wrong with it except that its head is turned upside down.

This, however, is quite a drawback to a chicken. Worms do not flourish in the atmosphere, and as the chicken's beak is turned skyward, it had a hard time learning to pick up food from the ground.

PECKS THE ATMOSPHERE.

But hunger forced it to do something, and as its mother did not know enough to put food in its upturned beak, the chicken "took a tumble to itself" literally. Now it lies down, almost standing on its head when it wants to eat. Men and women are said to have their heads turned sometimes, but chickens are rarely affected that way.

FREAKS MADE TO ORDER.

IN INDIA AND MALAY THEY ARE BRED FOR THE SHOW BUSINESS.

"How do you manage to find new freaks and curiosities?" was the question asked of the manager of a traveling "show" that had pitched its tent in a London suburb.

"Don't have to find them," was the laconic response. "They find us. The freak business is as regularly established as any other, and has its wholesale and retail firms, traveling salesmen, brokers, price lists, factories"—

"Factories?" queried the reporter, aghast.

"Why, certainly—factories—of course. The freak business is divided into about three varieties—foreign, domestic and fake.

"In the first-class the collectors travel all over the world in seach of rarities, but the very best freaks come from India and the Malay Peninsula. In these countries there are people who breed freaks. They buy young children and animals and deform them while their bones are soft by all manner of means. They are constantly on the outlook for genuine natural freaks and in those lands the birth of a freak occurs very frequently. The headquarters of this business is at Singapore.

"Then there are any number of men who devote themselves to the discovering and placing of freaks of all kinds and varieties, and there is scarcely a day goes by that we do not receive packages of photographs and illustrated circulars from some freak merchant or other.

"Of course, there are the 'faked' freak men—a perfect host in themselves. If the proprietor of some little show needs an additional attraction and does not have the money to hire something good—for, like everything else, freaks have their price—he can get something for little money that will serve his purpose.

"The real, genuine live freaks always command high prices, and travel all over the world in order to exhibit themselves. Most of them have regular routes mapped out by their advance agents, just like theatrical companies, and, as they only appear at a place at long intervals, they never get stale, and sometimes make bigger hits on their second or third appearance than on their first."

INDIANA ICE CAVE.

The Temperature at All Seasons Is Near to the Freezing Point.

One of the most remarkable natural phenomena that have been discovered in recent years has just been reported in the southwest corner of Brown County, Ind., near the village af Elkinsville. It is a cave and is on the farm of Billy Moore.

At its entrance, which is completely overlapped by the trees, cold air is plainly perceptible. The opening appears not unlike a mine shaft long disused, but the steep, rocky descent shows nothing of an artificial construction. The winding way leads to a cavern which is fully fifty feet below the surface. This is like a broad, vaulted corridor, and is known to the natives as the Devil's Chamber. The air in this apartment is near the freezing point. From this point quite a number of halls lead off in a confusing manner, but the one to the ice vault is evident from the cold blast which comes from it.

The descent in this natural corridor is similar to the rocky decline at the entrance of the cave, but not over a dozen yards within the ice is plainly visible, and further on it is thick on all sides, like the crust that is formed on the pipes of an ice plant. A little further on the descent entirely ceases, and here the walls are frozen hard like the ground in the middle of the winter. Then the narrow way leads into a mammoth chamber known as an ice vault. This extends fully 100 feet. The ice towers in a miniature mountain. It stands in a solid mass, extending downward to a depth which it would be folly to conjecture.

A SINGULAR POWER.

This Young Woman Could Enlarge Her Hand at Will.

Miss Harriet Morgan died recently in Piketon, O., from quick consumption, contracted last winter while going to watch at the bedside of a sick friend. She possessed one peculiarity which had given her considerable notoriety in the region adjacent to her home and which entitled her to rank as a curiosity. Her right hand was a trifle larger than her left, but it was so perfectly formed that a cusual observer would not notice the difference in them. She also had the power to increase the size of the larger hand by a simple effort of her will. She could not explain how she did it, but without an effort she could lengthen the fingers and make the flesh swell considerably. She was a talented musician and a popular girl socially.

BIRDS THAT FEIGN DEATH.

Probably Instinct Teaches Them That This Trick May Save Them.

One of the most remarkable devices resorted to by wild things for their own protection is that of shamming death. A beetle or spider will double in its legs and lie as if dead. The reason for this is obvious. It may then be passed over, mistaken for a bit of leaf or stick. But it is more difficult to account for this practice in birds.

A moor hen or land rail will feign death, lying in the hand perfectly limp and to all appearances unconscious. It has been suggested that the idea is that, being already dead, the captor will not trouble to kill them.

More probably it is merely a ruse in the hope that by lying still they may be forgotten and crawl off presently unobserved. Another reason is suggested by the fact that cats and the cat tribe do not often touch their prey unless it moves.

THE WINGLESS BIRD.

The Apteryx Cannot Fly, but It Gets There Just the Same.

Here is one of the queerest of birds. It is called the apteryx.

Apteryx means wingless. For a long while many scientific men denied that there was any such bird, but finally explorers in New Zealand brought back specimens that settled the matter. Once they denied the giraffe.

The apteryx is about two feet high and has a bill nearly half as long as itself. Near the end of this bill is its nose, which is of use to the creature in picking up its food in the dark. During the day it usually hides in the thick underbrush or in caves among the rocks. Worms are its chief food, and it is extremely expert in prying them out from under stones and logs.

The Australians call it the kiwi-kiwi. It belongs to a family that is extinct save for it, and at the rate at which the apteryx is disappearing it will soon follow the dodo and become a wingless memory. Nature to a certain extent compensates for lack of wings by giving it most muscular legs, which enable it to get over the ground faster than the average hog can run.

APTERYX—THE BIRD WITHOUT WINGS

Bricks Made From Straw.

Paving brick made from straw is a novel invention. It is but a third the weight of ordinary brick, and can be manufactured at half the cost. This new paving material may be used to a considerable extent in the West. The inventor says that the wheat straw which annually goes to waste in the West is sufficient to pave the streets of every city on the continent.

A Pacing Dog.

"'Possum," a small spotted dog belonging to Capt. John T. Jones of Winchester, Ky., has developed into a pacer. "'Possum" makes his home with the horses at Capt. Jones' stable at the fair grounds, and is very much attached to them. Whenever one is taken out for a drive "'Possum" goes along and paces out the mile with the best of them.

A HUMAN-FACED HEN.

This Freak Has No Beak and Has Finger-Nails for Claws.

A human-faced hen was found last week in a lot of 10,000 chickens shipped from Michigan to Washington Market, New York City.

Samuel Rosenstein, a dealer in poultry, discovered the fowl and purchased it. It is now on exhibition in a jewelry store and attracts large crowds.

The hen is of the Plymouth Rock variety, and of the usual size. The chin is double and the beak is shortened into a nose, which resembles that of a man.

The tongue is neither so hard nor so pointed as that of the common barnyard fowl, but can be moved as easily and in as many directions as a human tongue. Several of the claws are provided with tips resembling finger-nails.

HEN WITH A HUMAN FACE.

No corn "goes" with this new specimen of the gallus bankiva. It prefers moistened bread or cake.

Mr. Rosenstein intends to keep the hen to see what kind of a wonder her eggs will produce.

"ROOT, HOG, OR DIE."

But This Hog With No Snout to Root With Still Lives.

If the old expression, "Root, Hog, or Die," were put into execution, it would be a case of "die" with a porker born near Henderson, Kv.

It has no more of a snout than a rabbit, and its nostrils are in the roof of its mouth.

It is obliged to keep its jaws open in order to breathe, and the sound it makes is much like that of a man with a cold in his head.

A ROOTER WHICH CAN'T ROOT.

Its mouth is wholly unlike the pattern adopted by well regulated members of the hog family, and the chin is round, giving the little animal an appearance disagreeably human.

It has only one eye, and from all appearances that is all nature intended it should have, as there is only one socket.

The pig takes food and seems to be healthy, but its feet are not mates, and it walks with some difficulty.

The animal is the property of Farmer George McBride. It is considered a great curiosity, and persons have traveled as far as a hundred miles to see it.

Some have ventured the opinion that it is a descendant of the common "railroad hog," but this theory is scouted by the wiseacres.

Wonderful Changes in a Fish's Color.

In France they have a species of trout called the "black burn." He is almost pure black when taken from the water, but changes color to suit the receptacle in which he is put. In a white jar the creature changes to a pure albino in from two to three days, but changes back to black when put in a dark vessel. In a common pottery jar he become a brick color, and in a glass globe he becomes [illegible] transparent that he can scarcely be [illegible]

THE MYSTERIOUS DEVIL'S POND.

IT HAS NO BOTTOM, IT NEVER FREEZES AND IT [illegible]IGHTS ALL VEGETATION.

In Massac County, Ill., on the Ohio River, may be seen one of nature's mysteries, which has been a puzzle to the natives for fifty years.

It is located about half a mile west of the county seat and is called the Devil's Pond.

How it got that name, or when, nobody seems to know. It was probably by common consent of the people, just as a fitting name will finally attach itself to any peculiar thing or person, without the effort of any particular individual.

Surely no more fitting designation could have been found, for an evil influence seems to hover continually over this insignificant body of water.

It is not more than twenty feet in diameter and is as round as though its edges had been shaped with the utmost care by some human agency.

On its surface continually is a thick green scum. No living man ever saw it clear. Winter or summer, it never changes. In warm weather or cold the same foul-smelling, repugnant odor is present and everybody except small boys on their way to the fishing holes beyond, in Massac Creek, gives it a wide berth.

It never rises, it never falls, it never changes. The surrounding country may be overflowed, as it always is in case of high water, but the Devil's Pond invariably maintains the same level.

The creek that runs by, less than a quarter of a mile away, has become frozen over a hundred times, but human eyes have never beheld the faintest trace of ice on the surface of the Devil's Pond.

It has no visible outlet nor inlet, and no man has ever succeeded in finding the bottom, if bottom it has. Three generations of boys have tried it, with every means known to boyish ingenuity, but they have failed, and manhood still finds them wondering.

The air that hangs over the pond is so fetid that nothing of a vegetable nature can grow in its vicinity, and even the hardy bullfrog shuns it as he would shun an evil-minded boy with a sharp stick.

About twenty feet east of the pond grows a mammoth oak tree, with one particular limb stretching out over the surface of the water, like the beam of a gallows.

On this limb, an old tradition says, a murderer was hung in the dim past, when the town was in its infancy, and ever since then, in all kinds of weather, his headless ghost has walked nightly around the great tree and haunted the edges of the mysterious pond.

There is not one man in fifty in Massac County who could be hired to walk past the place at midnight.

MORTIMER DIES WHILE TRYING TO STAND ON THE CLIMATE.

WAT THE TYLER'S REVOLT.

The Assessor Treated His Daughter Shabbily—Nothing but War and Trouble.

(Copyrighted 1896 by J. B. Lippincott Company.)

CHAPTER XIV.

IRRITABILITY OF THE FRENCH: INTERMINABLE DISSENSION, ASSISTED BY THE PLAGUE, CONTINUES REDUCING THE POPULATION.

It is a little odd, but it is true, that Edward III. was crowned at 14 and married at 15 years of age. Princes in those days were affianced as soon as they were weighed, and married before they got their eyes open, though even yet there are many people who do not get their eyes opened until after marriage. Edward married Philippa, daughter of the Count of Hainault, to whom he had been engaged while teething.

In 1328 Mortimer mixed up matters with the Scots, by which he relinquished his claim to Scotch homage. Being still the gentleman friend of Isabella, the regent, he had great influence. He assumed, on the ratification of the above treaty by Parliament, the title of Earl of March.

The young Prince rose to the occasion and directed several of his nobles to forcibly drag the Earl of March from the apartments of the guilty pair, and in 1330 he became the Earl of Double-Quick March—a sort of forced March—towards the gibbet, where he was last seen trying to stand on the English climate. The Queen was kept in close confinement during the rest of her life, and the morning papers of that time contained nothing of a social nature regarding her doings.

The Scots, under David Bruce, were defeated at Halidon Hill in 1333, and Bruce fled to France. Thus again under a vassal of the English King, Edward Baliol by name, the Scotch crooked the reluctant hinges of the knee.

Edward now claimed to be a more direct heir through Queen Isabella than Philip, the cousin of Charles IV., who occupied the throne, so he proceeded to vindicate himself against King Philip in the usual way. He destroyed the French fleet in 1340, defeated Philip, though with inferior numbers, at Crecy, and demonstrated for the first time that cannon could be used with injurious results on the enemy.

In 1346, the Black Prince, as Edward was called, on account of the color of the Russia iron used in making his mackintosh, may be said to have commenced his brilliant military career. He captured Calais—the key to France—and made it a flourishing English city and a market for wool, leather, tin and lead. It so continued for 200 years.

The Scotch considered this a good time to regain their independence, and David Bruce took charge of the enterprise, but was defeated at Neville's Cross, in 1346, and taken prisoner.

Philippa here distinguished herself during the absence of the King, by encouraging the troops and making a telling equestrian speech to them before the battle. After the capture of Bruce, too, she repaired to Calais, where she prevented the King's disgraceful execution of six respectable citizens who had been sent to surrender the city.

NO MONARCH OF SPIRIT CARES TO HAVE HIS THRONE PULLED FROM UNDER HIM JUST AS HE IS ABOUT TO OCCUPY IT.

During a truce between the English and French, England was visited by the Black Death, a plague that came from Asia and bade fair to depopulate the country. London lost 50,000 people, and at times there were hardly enough people left to bury the dead or till the fields. This contagion occurred in 1349 and even attacked the domestic animals.

John having succeeded Philip in France, in 1350 Edward made another effort to recover the French throne, but no monarch of spirit cares to have his throne pulled from beneath him just as he is about to occupy it, and so, when the Black Prince began to burn and plunder Southern France, his father made a similar excursion from Calais in 1355.

The next year the Black Prince sent 12,000 men into the heart of France, where they met an army of 60,000, and the English general offered all his conquests cheerfully to John for the privilege of returning to England; but John overstepped himself by demanding an unconditional surrender, and a battle followed in which the French were whipped out of their boots and the king captured. We should learn from this to know when we have enough.

TAX RECEIVER

A STRIKING ILLUSTRATION OF WAT TYLER'S CONTROVERSY WITH THE TAX RECEIVER.

This battle was memorable because the English loss was mostly confined to the common soldiery, while among the French it was peculiarly fatal to the nobility. Two dukes, nineteen counts, 5,000 men-at-arms, and 8,000 infantry were killed, and a bobtail flush royal was found to have been bagged as prisoners.

For four years John was a prisoner, but well treated. He was then allowed to resume his renovated throne; but failing to keep good his promises to the English, he came back to London by request, and died there in 1364.

IN 1330 MORTIMER BECAME THE EARL OF DOUBLE-QUICK MARCH.

The war continued under Charles, the new French monarch; and though Edward was an able and courteous foe, in 1370 he became so irritated because of the revolt of Limoges, notwithstanding his former kindness to its people, that he caused 3,000 of her citizens to be put to the sword.

The Black Prince fought no more, but after six years of illness died, in 1376, with a good record for courage and statecraft. His father, the King, survived him only a year, expiring in the sixty-fifth year of his age, 1377.

English literature was encouraged during his reign, and John Wickliffe, Gower, Chaucer, and other men whose genius greatly outstripped their orthography were seen to flourish some.

Edward III. was succeeded by his grandson, Richard, and war with France was maintained, though Charles the Wise held his own, with the aid of the Scotch under Robert II., the first of the Stuarts.

A heavy war-tax was levied per capita at the rate of three groats on male and female above the age of 15, and those who know the value of a groat will admit that it was too much. A damsel named Tyler, daughter of Wat the Tyler, was so badly treated by the assessor that her father struck the officer dead with his hammer, in 1381, and placed himself at the head of a revolt, numbering one hundred thousand people, who collected on Blackheath. Jack Straw and Rev. John Ball also aided in the convention. The latter objected to the gentlemen on general principles, claiming that Adam was no gentleman, and that Eve had still less claim in that direction.*

In this outbreak, and during the same year, the rebels broke into the city of London, burned the palaces, plundered the warehouses and killed off the gentlemen wherever an alibi could not be established, winding up with the murder of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

During a conference with Tyler, the King was so rudely addressed by Wat that Walworth, Mayor of London, struck the rebel with his sword and others despatched him before he knew exactly Wat was Wat.

Richard, to quiet this storm, acceded to the rebel demands until he could get his forces together, when he ignored his promises in a right royal manner in the same year. One of these concessions was the abolition of slavery and the novel use of wages for farm work. By his failure to keep this promise, serfdom continued in England 400 years afterwards.

Richard now became unpopular and showed signs of worthlessness. He banished his cousin Henry and dispossessed him of his estates. This, of course, irritated Henry, who entered England while the King was in Ireland, and his forces were soon joined by sixty thousand malcontents.

Poor Richard wandered away to Wales, where he was in constant danger of falling off, and after living on chestnuts knocked from the high trees by means of his sceptre, he returned disgusted and took up his quarter in the Tower, where he died of starvation in 1400.

Nothing can be more pathetic than the picture of a King crying for bread, yet willing to compromise on tarts. A friendless King sitting on the hard stone floor of the Tower, after years spent on board an elastic throne with rockers under it, would move even the hardened historian to tears. (A brief intermission is here offered for unavailing tears.)

*Rev. John Ball chose as a war-cry and transparency these words:

"When Adam delved and Eve span,
Where was then the gentleman?"

Those who have tried it in modern times say that to be a gentleman is no sinecure, and the well-bred author falls in with this sentiment, though still regarding is as a great boon.—Historian.

AND THOMAS FAINTED.

Mr. Smalley: Now, Margaret, John will help you to mount and steady you just at first; you will soon—

Mrs. S.: Thomas Smalley! How dare you suggest such a thing? John will do no such thing. A nice dutiful husband you are—— John, indeed! You shall hold me on yourself, Thomas.

ACCORDING TO PRECEDENT.

The villain in the blood and thunder romance had laid plans for many a dark deed and many a fell crime.

But owing to the exceeding popularity of heroes, the author had not permitted the villain to carry any of his nefarious schemes to a successful conclusion.

The hero has been too much for him on every occasion.

Nevertheless, in no case had the villain failed.

He had not been defeated.

Nor worsted.

In every instance he had been "foiled"—save twice, and on these two occasions he had been "baffled."

"You threw stones at me yesterday, didn't you—

NOT READY TO LEAVE YET.

"Thurber," said Mr. Cleveland to his private secretary, "I lately saw a statement that President Tyler, while in the White House, was the father of fourteen children."

"Yes, sir."

"Then, Thurber, it is clear that I must have several more terms."

"HAVING A BULLY TIME."

"Tossing a copper."

A GREAT HEAD.

Ragged Haggard (musingly): Dis gamblin' in stocks is mighty risky business; to-day you make a t'ousand dollars, an' to-morrow you lose twice as much.

Wabbly Walker (who has a bulging brow): If dat's de way it goes, I've got a scheme dat will beat de game.

"What is it?"

"Gamble to-day an' lay off to-morrow."

CATHODE RAY SAW.

Scientists in all parts of the habitable globe have been experimenting with the cathode ray since Prof. Roentgen made his marvellous discovery public, and many wonderful powers have been found to reside therein. It has remained, however, for Prof. Weddison, of the Technological College of Squedunk, to make the most wonderful discovery of all.

Prof. Weddison concentrates the cathode ray on a revolving disk of glass, the disk being serrated all around its edge with saw teeth. Then, if the ray so concentrated be allowed to pass through the disk and fall upon a log of wood, the timber is immediately sawed in two, just as though a circular saw had passed through the log in the usual manner.

A slight change in the adjustment will bring the ray an inch or two further along the log, as desired, and thus enough kindling wood to last a family a week can be cut in a few moments.

Prof. Weddison is now working on an attachment to the ray which is intended to carve boarding-house chickens, but he refuses to give any idea of when he expects to perfect this apparatus.

And now, that I've got you, I think—

IT AIDED THE COLONIES.

King George took off his crown and let the cool air play with his fevered brow.

"You say," he remarked, musingly, "that Washington, Adams, Jefferson and Hancock are the four leaders in this rebellion."

Lord North bowed his head and again referred to the dispatches from America.

"They are, sire," he replied.

George III. puffed out his cheeks.

"A set of adventurers," he cried, contemptuously: "I'll crush them with a single hand."

Lord North slowly shook his head.

"You forget one thing, sire," he gravely remarked.

George III. scratched his nose reflectively with his sceptre.

"What is it?" he asked, abruptly.

"You forget, sire, returned the minister, fastening his majesty with a glittering eye, "that it is absolutely impossible for one king to get away with two pair."

And from that moment it was felt in court circles that the royalist cause was hopeless.

DISQUALIFICATION.

Judge (to prospective juryman): Have you any preconceived ideas, sir, in regard to this case?

Prospective Juryman: I think——

Judge: Stop! sir; stop right there! You are disqualified for the duties of a juryman.

HIS REWARD.

CHAPTER I.

Several years elapsed.

During those years Harold Herssoot had striven hard and struggled much to attain his ambition.

As the months flew on and he surveyed himself and his tawny and bushy locks in the mirror he would lose heart.

And then he would curse his fate.

He would even tear his hair out by the handfuls, or handsful, as the case may be.

But it hurt in either case.

So he was perforce to be content to wait.

Simply wait.

CHAPTER II.

Several years elapsed.

Harold Herssoot's hair was as bushy and tawny as ever.

Years ago he would have gnashed his teeth.

Now he simply waited.

"How long—how long?"

CHAPTER III.

Several years elapsed.

"One seat, please, in the front row!"

The mogul in the box-office peered out distrustfully through the hole which the management had thoughtfully made too small for the enraged public to shake its clenched fists through, and surveyed the complacent face of Harold Herssoot.

As if in answer to the glance, Mr. Herssoot removed his faultless Knockslop hat and exposed a smooth, ivory-like expanse of uninterrupted hairlessness.

Satisfied, the mogul gave the seat asked for.

CHAPTER IV.

Success had at last crowned Harold Herssoot's efforts at waiting. He had his view, full, undisturbed and unbroken, of the ballet. Several more years elapsed.

DEPARTMENT STORES.

(Editorial from the Daily Nit.)

The ever present alarmist has ventured to descry in the marvellous spread of the modern department store another menace to the social and industrial life of the nation—another instance of the concentration in the hands of a few of the powers and privileges that should of right be distributed among the masses. We confess an inability to discern ought but good in the department store movement. Its faults may exist, but think of the infinitude of its blessings. When one time a thousand shopkeepers bought and sold and ran the gauntlet of mercantile disaster, now one man, through the medium of a great corps of lieutenants, carries on the vast enterprise and thus relieves his fellowmen from the weight and anxiety that proceed from a proprietor's position.

We hope to see the department store increase in its scope until in the smaller communities one store shall be enough in which to group every form of trade and barter, while in the large cities three or four establishments shall suffice for the carrying on of all business. Already this condition of things is forecast. The recent bill enacted by the Pennsylvania Legislature permits Mr. Wannamaker to concentrate the entire dry-goods and ready-made clothing trade of Philadelphia under one roof. This means present ruin to the other dry-goods and clothing houses of that city, but in the end, under the wise and charitable direction of Mr. Wanamaker, the interest of the public will be better subserved, we think there is no opportunity to question. Would that the times might raise up a score of John Wanamakers to carry on the business of the whole country.

I'll just break—

THE OWL AND THE CLAM.

A FABLE.

A Traveleer, who was making his way along the seashore, espied an Owl perched in a tree on the beach, and near by reposed a Clam. The Owl winked and blinked, but preserved silence, and the Clam had its shell tightly closed and gave no sign.

"Ah! but here is wisdom indeed" exclaimed the Traveler. "I doubt not that both of these would give me valuable advice if I could only prevail upon them to talk."

Thereupon he coaxed and entreated them by turns to break through their silence, and at the end of half an hour the Owl opened its mouth and uttered a harsh and dismal hoot. The Clam at the same time opened its shell and yawned sleepily.

"Great Scott! but how I have wasted my time" exclaimed the Traveler. "The one but opened his mouth to make discord and the other to show that he had no brains!"

MORAL:

The man who never talks can only be criticised for what he doesn't say.

IN FASHIONABLE CIRCLES.

One can't see how it's done at all,
Yet 'tis a fact, they swear,
That nobody goes to play or ball
Till everybody's there.

TURN ABOUT.

"My gracious, Johnny! Why are you pounding Willie Stuffington on the stomach in that manner?" asked the good lady who was presiding over one of the tables at the church supper.

"Because he has eaten all he can hold without havin' it shook down, an' he wants another piece of cake," replied Johnny Squanch. "He's goin' to do the same thing for me when I get full."

HE EXPLAINS.

Prisoner (in New Jersey): I'm no burglar, Your Honor. I had no burglar's tools——

Justice: But you were found after night with a mask on.

Prisoner: Mosquitoes, Your Honor. I'm a stranger here and I had to do something.

THE HARDEST JARGON.

They were all puzzled by the language of the new arrival. The interpreter tried all the languages he knew and failed miserably. The Chinese and Afghans found the newcomer's talk incomprehensible. At last they got a young girl to interpret for them.

"It's all right," said the young girl, after a few words with the stranger. "She's an American dressmaker and employs the language of her profession."

A TRIOLET.

Contemptuous curled his lower lip
Into a bitter sneer;
And yet I feared that gore would drip—
Contemptuous curled his lower lip,
Convenient for the razor's trip
Right downward from his ear—
Contemptuous curled his lower lip
Into a bitter sneer.

DOG FOR DINNER.

"Gimme me something to eat!

"Thanks, mum."

"I'd rather have had something ready cooked, but this 'll do."

A NIOBE BY NECESSITY.

"Dear me"—

The hard, stern-looking female scarcely suggested one who felt much sympathy for the woes of her fellow creatures.

——"It jest nat'rally makes me cry, but"——

She put aside the volume to weep afresh.

——"a woman that knew enough to write a cook book oughter hev a receipt for peelin' onions dry eyed!"

Conning it again, she resumed the concoction of the kidney stew.

POINTLESS JOKES.

Mr. Gilley (at 10:55 p. m.): There's nothing funny in these jokes about young men staying late when they call on the girls.

Miss Kissam (with a sigh and a yawn): I see nothing funny in them, either.

SECURED AT A BARGAIN.

Mertir: I am going to marry Count Spaghetti, the last scion of an illustrious family.

Mertie: Oh, a remnant. How nice.

Your blooming—

HE BROKE OUPT.

A Magistrate once did indict
A man for not doing just rict;
The policeman who brought him
Used his club when he caught him,
Till his head was a terrible sict.

Of his guilt there was never a douot;
So they sent him at once o'er a roupt
That he'd traveled before
Through the prison's great door
When he took measles and quickly broke oupt.

LAZY BACHELOR'S SALVATION.

Teller: Pokelong declares that if he marries at all he will wed a widow.

Grimshaw: Yes, confound him; he is too lazy to do any of the courting himself!

HER INTENTIONS WERE GOOD.

Gobang: I do not know why folks complain about mothers-in-law. Mine tried to do me a good turn once.

Pshaw: How? Did she attempt suicide?

Gobang: No, she refused her consent to my marrying her daughter. But I was suspicious and we eloped.

THE SCORCHER.

With a ghastly grin and a gruesome glare; with speeding spurt and a stony stare; with a ripping rush and a reckless reel, comes the wriggling wretch on his whirling wheel.

His eyes stick out and his jaws drop low, and he cares not a cuss where he may go. He tears o'er the crossing; he scoots up the street, and woe to that man whom he chances to meet.

He has no bell for a warning ring; he won't go home till he's had his fling. If he hits a dog or does up a cat, if he scares a horse with his blown-off hat; if he kills a baby or breaks someone's limb, he feels it's a well-spent day for him.

Or if he bangs into an awkward cuss who is trying to ride without making a fuss, and he gets pulled in, he pays his fine and swears that he's having a deuce of a time.

He smashes his wheel and he busts his tire, as his speed grows higher, higher, higher. Now he's off again, is this scorcher grim, and there's somebody wont do a thing to him when at last he reaches a place below where there's but little rain and much less snow.

He scorched on earth, 'twas his greatest boast; he'll scorch down there and he'll likewise roast.

LOOKED LIKE IT.

First Dentist: Are you going to make any money this year?

Second Dentist: I guess so. I seem to be pulling out all right.

A NATURAL CONCLUSION.

"He's the very picture of you, sir," cried the delighted nurse, dancing the first edition smartly up and down; "a perfect image of you, sir, even to the little scar on his chin—you noticed the little scar on his chin?"

The editor of the Jayville Clarinet laid a finger thoughtfully upon his brow.

"We will consider him, then," he said, in a grave, professional tone, "as a marked copy."

ALL OUT OF CLEWS.

"Call all the men working on that girl murder case before me!"

The Chief of Police was furiously angry. He paced impatiently up and down the narrow strip of carpet, awaiting the arrival of his sleuth-hounds.

"Now, men," he said, as soon as they were all before him, "what is the reason this murderer is not caught?"

One of them, who appeared to be the spokesman for the others, replied apologetically:

"Well, Chief, I'm sure we've all worked hard enough on the case."

"Then why," thundered their superior, "why, in the name of crime, have you met with no success?"

"We don't seem to be able to get any clews," murmured the same detective, after an awkward pause.

"And why not?" inquired the Chief, with withering sarcasm.

"Well, sir," returned their leader, doggedly, "you ought to know as well as us that all the reporters have gone to Chicago for the convention."

THE SWEET GIRL GRADUATE.

Soon, with smiles and blushes sweet, and in white from head to feet, she will stand; once again this girl we greet, with her ribboned essay neat in her hand. She has studied long and well, and she can't begin to tell all she knows. She's a graduation belle; in her brain each little cell fairly glows. She knows Spanish, French and Greek; she can Latin speak, and speak like a book; on her dress before our eyes shines the triple-plated prize, which she took. Her rhetoric is fine and her science in line with the rest; in history she's au fait and her botany's O. K. on a test. A circle she can square while doing up her hair, it is said; and of problems dark and deep she can the figures keep in her head. On the platform see her now make a courtesy and bow to her friends; hear them listen to her "piece," which goes as slick as grease till it ends. Then the people all applaud, while they whisper, "Good for Maude," which is true, and they send up big bouquets and they turn her head with praise, so they do. Thus the girl goes out in life, and some fellow gets a wife, very smart; but she could not mend his hose or patch up his other clothes when they start. Nor has she yet learned to try making cake and apple pie like her ma; hence her hubby's cash doth fly, when or where she don't know why, a la pa. All of which most clearly shows what perhaps the reader knows; it is this: Some things yet within the pate of the sweet girl graduate are amiss.

IT BEAT THE BIKE.

Alongside the highway was an old farmer ploughing out corn, and riding the razor-backed horse, man fashion, which drew the plough, was a girl of 16.

"Say, you!" called the bicycle agent as he stopped his team, "can't I sell you a bike for your daughter there?"

"Agent, eh?" queried the farmer, as he leaned on the fence.

"Yes, I have the agency of a fifty-dollar bike. How many daughters have you?"

"Seven."

"Then you want at least three bikes, and I'll tell you what I'll do. If you'll take three"——

"Don't want 'em!" interrupted the old man. "You are a week too late. Seven or eight days ago them seven gals was jest dyin' fur bicycles, but I've made 'em take turns ridin' that ole hoss fur half a day at a time and now you couldn't give 'em a machine fur nothin'. Say, Mary!"

"What, dad?" answered the girl on the horse.

"Want one of them bicycles?"

"Good Lawd, no!" she replied, as she wriggled about. "Let's finish gittin' around so's I kin go to bed fur the rest of the week!"

A FORCED LAUGH.

TOM DAVIS PRAYED.

On the depot platform as the train stopped was a man sitting on a trunk with blood on his face and his right arm in a sling, and he was being watched over by a woman whom we took to be his wife. Some one said there had been a shooting scrape, but we did not ascertain the particulars until the train started on. Then, in answer to inquiries, the woman replied:

"Yes, he got shot. Tom Davis shot him."

"What was it about?"

"'Bout a dawg, sah. Tom coaxed our dawg away and wouldn't gin him up; we come down yere to see 'bout it, and that brung on the shootin'."

"And Mr. Davis came out ahead, did he?"

"Yes, sah, he did. He jest dropped my ole man and walked off. I told Jim how it would be, but he wouldn't heed me. Last night, when I knowed he was comin' arter that dawg, I sez to him, sez I: 'Jim Whitford, don't forget to pray to the Lawd that yo' may git the drop on Tom Davis,' but he dun wouldn't pray. Jest said the Lawd didn't hev nuthin' to do with it. I prayed, but as I wasn't handlin' the gun it didn't do no good."

"And do you think Tom Davis prayed?"

"Reckon he did, sah, and he got his wife and all the rest of the folks to help him. Of co'se he did. He was all ready fur to shoot when Jim walked up to him, and that shows. Jim thought he was all ready, too, but he wasn't. He began to talk dawg and pull trigger, but the dratted gun wouldn't go off no how, and Tom Davis dropped him."

"Is he badly hurt?"

"Wall, it might hev been wuss. Reckon he'll lay up fur about three months and then try it again, but yo' jest reckon to consider he won't run them chances agin. We'll sot out to pray at sundown and keep a-whoopin' all night, and next day Tom Davis' wife will be a-gettin' out her mournin' bonnet and readin' up on grave-stuns!"

The Girl (with some embarrassment): We were among the first arrivals. But——

The Youth (gallantly): Had I known that I should have left town earlier.

The Girl (with a half smile): You are very good. But, pardon me for saying so; you have somewhat the advantage of me.

The Youth (in surprise): The advantage of you! Have you forgotten the lawn tennis games of last year?

The Girl: No, indeed. I am too fond of the game.

The Youth: Don't you remember the buckboard drives on the old shingle road?

The Girl: Perfectly. I hope to go on many more this summer.

The Youth (seating himself beside her): Surely, your memory is not lost to the little canoeing parties, unchaperoned, out to the island, where all resolved themselves into pairs, as fancy and inclination dictated?

The Girl (enthusiastically): Oh, no; I shall never forget those.

The Youth (in a low voice): Or the evening strolls on the board walk, with an occasional seat in some sheltered nook, safe from the moonlight and—and the others?

The Girl (a soft light in her eyes: How could I forget such things?

The Youth (bending closer); Do you not recall one night—it was the night of the hotel hop, I think—when, tired of dancing, you wandered away towards the surf with—with—well, we will say with the man to whom you had given nearly every waltz?

The Girl (with flushed cheeks and faint voice): Yes, I think I do.

The Youth: And how he whispered in your ear that he loved you. And would always love you?

The Girl (whose face is now scarlet): Yes, yes. But——

The Youth: Although you would not whisper back that you loved him in return, still you told him that he might love you, if he wished. That you wanted him to love you. That you would think of him all through the dreary winter in the city.

The Girl (who has now quite recovered her composure): And, admitting all this to be true?

The Youth (puzzled): I do not understand you. You say you remember everything and yet——

The Girl: I have not forgotten anything. I recall it all. In fact, other things that you have not mentioned. But——

The Youth (blankly): But——

The Girl (looking him calmly in the eyes): I don't seem to be able to place you.

THE EVE OF PROPHECY.

John Hancock completed his bold signature and stood back with a thoughtful air.

"It's going to make lots of trouble," he said, shaking his head at the Declaration of Independence.

"For King George," added the others hopefully.

"For our descendants," said John Hancock in a grave tone.

His companions looked at each other doubtingly.

"We don't see what trouble it's going to make for them," they rejoined.

John Hancock regarded them coldly.

"You forget," he said, severely, "the millions of people yet unborn who have got to give up an entire night's sleep listening to the boys celebrating it."

And the signers of the Declaration, who had grown accustomed to the peaceful quiet and unbroken rest of Philadelphia, wondered if after all they were doing a thing that posterity would be grateful for.

A WASTE OF MONEY.

He was little and mean and stingy, and no one who knew him liked him. Just why he lived was a mystery, and if he had died no one would have mourned and the undertaker who buried him would have rejoiced and made exceeding glad. His law practice consisted principally of collections, but he, perhaps, made more money than many of the attorneys who thought themselves much better than he was.

He ambled into Lawyer Perkins' office one day and took a seat. Perkins was busy, and with a "Take a seat, Jawkins," went on with his writing. Having finished that, Perkins turned and said: "Well, what can I do for you?"

"Oh, nothing at all," said Jawkins; "I just dropped in for a little visit."

The idea amused Perkins, who had been at times bitter and caustic in his comments with other lawyers when Jawkins was under discussion.

Jawkins said nothing further, and Perkins was at a loss how to proceed with a conversation. As he looked at the little, dried-up figure before him, he wondered what would be the ultimate end of the man. Then Perkins inquired: "Why don't you get married?"

"Get married," echoed Jawkins; "can't afford it. What do you suppose it costs me each year to live? Just to live, mind you?"

"I have not the slightest idea," said Perkins. "How much?"

"Four hundred dollars, sir; four hundred dollars."

Perkins gazed at Jawkins in astonishment for a long minute and then he said: "I would not pay it. Its not worth that much."

A LIVELY QUESTION.

It was the end of the world.

Gabriel's last trump had been played, and everybody was passing in his checks as fast as they could be cashed.

After some busy hustling it was seen that only five men remained.

They were wrangling and disputing with much heat.

Finally one of them advanced to the celestial window and asked in a hesitating manner for a little more time.

"No more renewals now," said Gabriel firmly. "Settle up! Tell your friends that. What yer got, anyway?"

"Oh, it's a lot," said the man, "but we can't tell just how much till we settle if the deal passes or not after an exposed card in the draw. We haven't agreed so far, but—"

The archangel laughed a laugh of sardonic rudeness.

"Think I'm going to wait here for a thousand years," he asked, roughly.

With a hopeless sigh the other turned away, realizing that the rapidly approaching limit of eternity precluded the possibility of harmonious compromise ever being effected.

And to-day our Jersey lightning love
Is as strong as it used to be,
But her's is bestowed on her fourth sweetheart,
And mine's doing duty with three.

JUSTICE AMONG THE SEMINOLES.

A HOG THIEF PUBLICLY WHIPPED AND MADE TO PAY UP BESIDES.

An example of justice according to the views of the Seminole Indians was witnessed recently at Wewoka, I. T., the capital of the Seminole Nation.

It is here that the National Council meets to enact laws and to hold court. Where the offense is committed by a Seminole against a Seminole, the Nation has jurisdiction. If one party to the trouble or controversy is a white man, the United States authorities have charge, and the matter must be settled in a United States Court.

A half-breed, William Foster, was accused of stealing hogs. Gov. Brown of the Seminole Nation ordered his light horsemen to bring Foster in, dead or alive. The light horsemen are Indian police employed by the Seminole Nation and correspond to United States marshals.

Foster was a desperate man and more than once has stood the light horsemen off at the point of a rifle, and it was thought he could not be taken alive. The Indians finally "got the drop" on him, and brought him to Wewoka in chains. He was closely guarded till the Council met to take action on his case.

The Council of thirty-five met last week. Four members were negroes. It was a very warm day and the session was held outdoors under an arbor. The seats of the members were arranged in a circle, in the center of which was a table and chairs for the Secretary and other officials. On the ground was a bucket of plug tobacco. Very few of the Council smoked. Near the arbor sat the Governor in a large easy chair.

On assembling, the Council took their seats in silence and at the roll call each grunted a sullen response. At a given signal every one dropped on his knees, his hands folded in devotion, while one offered a prayer long and fervent. At its close each Indian resumed his seat with the taciturnity that only the Indian can assume.

Foster's case was the first called. There was no judge. The prosecutor called to the witness chair the man whose hog had been stolen and questioned him. At the beginning of the examination the Governor made a speech and during the trial several of the Council arose and commented upon the testimony, but most of them remained silent. Occasionally one stepped to the bucket of tobacco and cut off "a chew." The prosecuting witness was the only one examined.

The defendant was not only not allowed any witnesses, but he was not present, being chained with several other prisoners under a shed about a square away. He didn't even know he was being tried.

At the close of the testimony one member rose and pleaded that they should be lenient with Foster, as he was ignorant of their laws, but little attention was paid to this, and the Council was asked to vote if they believed Foster guilty. Four or five of them held up their hands. This was enough. If only one had voted it would have been sufficient to convict. No negative vote is ever taken. If no one votes the accused is deemed innocent.

MADE TO PAY FOR THE HOG.

An officer now brought Foster in and he was asked if he had any money to pay for the hog he had stolen. The Seminoles always make thieves pay for the things they steal of members of the tribe, and if they have no property with which to make good their theft it is kept out of their annuity money from the United States by the Governor. The amount of the theft in this case, together with the costs, was $20.

Foster said he had no money. Then they wanted to take one of his horses to satisfy the debt, but he would not let it go at that price.

He finally settled it by signing over his annuity money for one year and giving his note for $5, signed by his father. During all this time not a word was said about [illegible] conviction. This was implied, per- [illegible] by asking him to pay for the hog. [illegible]er was anything said about his sentence. As soon as his case was disposed [illegible] another was taken up, and the work continued till night. No one, not even the Council, knew the penalty for any conviction the Council had made. That was left to the Governor.

About noon the next day the Governor announced that Foster should receive fifty lashes, and the light horsemen were ordered to bring him forward. In five minutes he was before the whipping post stripped to the waist. His black skin shone in the sunshine and the muscles on his arms and back and shoulders stood out in great knots and ridges like a trained prize-fighter's.

He stepped up to the whipping post with as much composure as an acrobat.

WHIPPED WITH HICKORY SWITCHES.

His hands were pinioned with a rope, one end of which was thrown over a crossbeam. Around his ankles was fastened a chain, and through it a long pole was thrust. A man stood on each end of it to hold him down. The rope on his hands was drawn taut, and his body stretched to its full length.

Two light horsemen were standing nearby with hickory sticks about three feet long and as thick as a man's thumb. At a signal one of them stepped up to Foster and began laying on the blows with all his strength, while a third stood by and counted. Almost every stroke brought the blood, and the whip struck with a dull, heavy sound like the beating of a cloth. At the twenty-fifth blow the counter called a halt, the whipper threw down his whip and stepped away while the second came up, and in the same manner laid on the other twenty-five blows.

During all this time not a sound escaped Foster's lips. Many thought he would faint when they let him down, but he stood as straight as when he had stepped up to take his punishment five minutes before, though his back, now trickling with blood, was cut and bruised. The Indians quickly unbound him and walked away laughing.

No medical attendance was furnished, but Foster, as soon as released, assisted by his father, walked to a tree under which lay his hat and shirt. As he moved away he looked after the Indians and remarked that he would see them again. He put his shirt over his bloody back with as much indifference to pain as if he had just risen from a morning nap. To the Indians it was an every-day affair, and they looked upon it without sympathy.

Foster's troubles were not to end with the whipping. As soon as he was dressed a United States Marshal arrested him on a charge of cow-stealing and took him to Center, in the Chickasaw Nation, for his preliminary trial.

At the whipping an Indian explained that the switches were cut the night before and the leader of the Light Horsemen selected the two he wanted and laid them away. The men he selected to apply them were not notified till a minute or two before the punishment, when he stepped up and handed each a whip.

TWO UNIQUE MONUMENTS.

One Erected to Southern Women, the Other to Faithful Slaves.

The little village of Fort Mill, on the line of the Southern Railroad in South Carolina, boasts of two monuments, the like of which is not to be found elsewhere in the United States. One of them is dedicated to the women of the Confederacy; the other is intended to commemorate the faithful slaves.

They were erected by Capt. Samuel E. White, and were unveiled a few days ago. The women's monument consists of a base, a pedestal and a statue. The statue shows a female figure kneeling on a Confederate flag, in the attitude of prayer. The other is a tall, plain shaft. On the base are proper inscriptions and two typical scenes from slave life, carved in the marble. It also bears the names of a half dozen slaves, whose loyalty to their masters is told by the monument.

Some years ago a shaft to the Confederate dead was raised in Fort Mill. Since then, Capt. White has concluded that the women and the slaves deserved recognition, and at his own expense the monuments were prepared and erected. During the war, while the men of the region were fighting at the front, the slaves remained at home and cared for the women and children. There was no insurrection, no runaways and no trouble whatever. To fittingly acknowledge this faithfulness of the slaves the monument was erected.

SHE FOUND FAME IN THE CHURN.

MRS. BROOKS TELLS HOW SHE BECAME FAMOUS—HER FATHER INVENTED THE FIRE ENGINE.

Mrs. Caroline L. Brooks is making a little visit to her sisters, the Misses Shanke, in their pretty cottage home in Carondelet.

To many this announcement means no more than any ordinary item of personal mention. There are others, however, particularly among the older set in St. Louis, who remember Mrs. Brooks as a bright St. Louis woman, who made her mark in the world by manipulating butter.

A STUDY IN BUTTER.

Many other women have made their marks in the world by molding thousands of pounds of butter for the market, but to this one woman alone was granted the ability and task to carve for herself a niche in the temple of fame by the artistic modeling of butter, from which she has carved enduring monuments in marble, which have been recognized in the Paris Salon, and secured medals at the World's Fair. Nor is this all. Her use of butter for this purpose brought about a revolution in modeling. Up to that time clay alone had been used. Now, by the use of oleaginous substances, oils have been introduced and the work is made much easier. For this invention Mrs. Brooks obtained a patent for composite clay.

It was at the Philadelphia Centennial Exposition in 1876 that Mrs. Brooks first achieved fame by her wonderful butter carvings. A Sunday Post-Dispatch reporter saw the now famous artist last week, and asked her how she came to think of doing such work.

"Just to escape the intolerable drudgery of butter-making," was the reply. "I had married and settled on a farm in Arkansas. It was after the war, when the servant system was entirely demoralized, and I had to make my own butter. I hated it. To vary the monotony I began molding it into forms. My first effort was a shell. The next time I made a very ornamental shell. From that I went in for toads, terrapins, fish, cows, flowers, anything I could think of, and as the work grew I found myself longing for churning day and another batch of butter to work upon. No one saw these things except the negroes and flatboatmen who bought my butter and ate it with no greater relish for the artistic labor bestowed upon it.

"But I was growing all the time. Some of my butter found its way to Memphis, where the rolls were criticised as works of art. Finally one day I made 'The Sleeping Iolanthe.' You can imagine my delight as I gazed at the face in the bottom of my wooden bowl, made of butter, yet so full of tenderness and feeling. I felt that it must not be lost. I brought it to St. Louis to show to my sisters; others saw it. And best of all, Mr. James E. Yeatman, that grand old man who has done so much to foster art in St. Louis, saw it and became interested in me and my work. He was enthusiastic over it. Yes, you may say Mr. James E. Yeatman discovered me. He had the 'Iolanthe' put on exhibition, and offered to be one of a party of patrons of art to send me to Europe.

"I did not go, but I went on with my work. I took casts of everything I made and my 'Sleeping Iolanthe' was one of the group which secured the medal at the World's Fair.

"At the Philadelphia Centennial my work first came into prominence. See this great book, containing hundreds of encouraging and flattering criticisms; and here are valuable autograph letters from the most distinguished people all over the world. The discovery of the use of oleaginous substances for modeling and composite clay proved of great value. The French school took it up at once, and through this I was enabled to go to Italy, and prosecute my studies. After I had advanced sufficiently I did a great deal of work on commission in the East. Mrs. La Ban, daughter of Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt, gave a commission for a family group of five figures, which enabled me to return to Italy and do all of the work for the Columbian Exposition at Chicago."

This group was very beautiful, and was made the center of Mrs. Brooks' exhibit in the Fine Art Gallery at the World's Fair. She had in all 17 marbles on exhibition there. They were chiefly in the State buildings. A group of four in the Art Gallery had already been passed upon by a foreign jury, with Larkin J. Mead at the head. The center of this group was the La Ban family. On either side was a figure of "Godiva," one, "Godiva Departing for the Ride," and the other, "Godiva Returning from the Ride." The fourth piece was the bas-relief medalion, "The Sleeping Iolanthe."

The photographs of these marbles are exquisite. The works themselves were well worthy of the medal bestowed. All of these pieces are about three-quarter life-size and were first modeled in butter. It is a true genius who can use the coarsest and commonest materials and make them glow with life and beauty, unique in art, yet full of delicacy and tender expression. She had also a marble "Victoria Regia" modeled for the pleasure of the Queen, a bust of Gen. Grant for the Ohio building, and one of Miss Susie Blow for the Missouri building. She had ten cases of marbles for the World's Fair, which arrived in New York in time, but were lost or mislaid, so that the Exposition closed before they were found. Some of them she has not recovered to this day.

This failure to receive her work involved her in such serious financial loss that she was forced to take a "concession" at the fair. A pavilion was built for her with the understanding that she was to be there, modeling every day. She made thousands of models, preserving as many as possible which she sold for large sums. On the States' days she modeled the Governors and their wives and other distinguished people, and for many of them received orders. If she had been able to do two things at once this might have been made a very lucrative feature, but she had not time to look after business.

"I was in prison all that time," said Mrs. Brooks, "but I got out of it what Bunyan got out of his. He got 'Pilgrim's Progress.' I got my ideas for the 'Columbian Memorial,' which I expect to make the work of my life."

Mrs. Brooks feels that her talent is one inherited from her father, Abel Shauke, who was a wonderfully gifted man, and would have made a shining mark in these days, when the whole world is on the lookout for merit, and ready to proclaim and reward it. He numbered among his close friends five Presidents, Polk, Jackson, J. Q. Adams, Martin Van Buren and Gen. Grant. In his collection may be found their pictures and autograph letters. Martin Van Buren was entertained in his house during his presidential canvass. He knew Lady Hamilton and Lady Madison and has daguerreotype pictures of them. He became interested in this art in its infancy and made the first daguerreotypes this side of the Alleghenies.

Abel Shauke was born of German parents at Wilkesbarre, Pa. The name means Chess, and there is a family tradition that in the old country they were carvers of chess. He, like other boys of that day, was taught a trade; being a natural machinist, he was made a blacksmith, and he made this a basis for experiments in other things, among others a patent lock, which proved successful, and made him a large fortune. By this time he had moved from Lisbon, O., to Cincinnati, and there became the close friend of Prof. Henry of the Smithsonian Institute. Together they experimented in electricity, which was the then recent discovery of Franklin, and they succeeded in sending the first intelligible message over the wires, Abel Shauke rolling the wire spool himself down to the levee in Cincinnati, where he established communication with the institute. Prof. Morse, who was also engaged in experiments in telegraphy, succeeded at about the same time in sending his first message, but in so much better shape that Shauke and Henry made no claim for honors.

ABEL SHAUKE.
Who Invented The Fire Engine.

Abel Shauke invented the first steam fire engine, about 1855. It was called "Young America," and was sold to Philadelphia. In his papers may be found numerous clippings from the Philadelphia papers concerning the excitement and admiration it created.

The second, called "The Union," was sold to St. Louis and brought across the Mississippi River on the ice. Both of these engines are still in existence.

About this time he made a telescope for the Transylvania University at Lexington, Ky. He was identified with all of the prominent institutions in Cincinnati.

In 1859 he moved to St. Louis. Mrs. Brooks was then a little girl, so that she was practically reared in this city. He came here to build the first blast furnace this side of the Alleghenies for retorting iron from the Iron Mountain and putting it in marketable shape. Owing to the war clouds, which came up about that time, the plans were not carried out, and he lost a great deal of money. Then began a series of misfortunes and disappointments, which wrecked his fortune and his life.

Early in the sixties he was associated with Capt. Eads in the building of the six gunboats which were launched from the wharf at Carondelet, but the noise of the firing of the guns produced concussion of the brain, from which he never recovered, and he remained for several years a hopeless invalid, nursed by his daughters.

Mrs. Brooks first turned her attention to school teaching, and was graduated from the St. Louis Normal School. She soon married, however, and then began her experiments in butter modeling.

One of her sisters is a clever artist with her brush, and Mrs. Brooks' daughter, who is married and resides in Paris, has also developed great ability for sculpture. Her first piece, "The First Bath," modeled from her own little son, has been very highly praised.

Mrs. Brooks is here from San Francisco, where she has been since the Mid-Winter Fair. She came to visit her sisters and look after her bust of Grant, which now stands in the Exposition building.

RELIC FROM AN OLD WRECK.

English Sword Buried for Three Quarters of a Century Found.

The recent finding of an English sword on the south beach of Long Island, opposite the Pon Quogue light, links the memory of the early part of the century with the present in an interesting manner. The sword is from the British man-of-war Sylph, which was wrecked during a severe gale in September, 1814, when the sand bar known as the great South Beach was blown its entire width inland.

The Sylph had been sent out by the British Government during the war of 1812, but the crew turned her into a pirate craft and preyed upon merchant vessels and villages along the coast. The wreck occurred upon the beach opposite the point where the Pon Quogue Light now stands, the ship being beaten to fragments and the crew of 109 men being drowned.

At that time a large inlet connected the ocean with the bay which lies between South Beach and the main land. A short time ago the Shinnecock Bay Improvement Association decided to have it reopened, and for that purpose hired the steam dredge recently used for cutting the Shinnecock Canal.

The Sylph was wrecked at or near the spot where the digging is now in progress, and among the many strange treasures of the sea which have been brought to light after their burial of more than three-quarters of a century is the old sword mentioned above.

The weapon is of antique English workmanship, and is incased in a leather sheath bearing in two places the initials "J. P." and the stamp of the English crown, which seems to prove beyond doubt that it is a relic of the pirate ship. The hilt has partially rotted away, but the steel blade is in a fairly good state of preservation. The sword is now in the possession of the engineer of the dredge.

There Was Plenty of It.

A hypochondriac, who was staying with Father Healy, at Bray, in the hope of obtaining relief from chronic dyspepsia, was one day taking a walk along the beach with his host. "I have derived relief from drinking a tumbler of salt water fresh from the tide," said the invalid, solemnly. "Do you think I might take a second?" "Well," said Father Healy, with great seriousness, "I don't think a second would be missed."

SOMETHING NEW IN DECORATIVE ART.

COFFERED CEILING ON A FOURTH STREET BUILDING—THE FIRST OF ITS KIND HERE.

The new building of the Mississippi Valley Trust Company, when completed, will have one of the most interesting ceilings in the city.

It is one of the first of the kind in the West and the first in St. Louis.

It is a coffered ceiling, richly decorated in the Italian renaissance style of ornament, and altogether beautiful to behold.

The figure is almost identical with that now being placed in the new clearing-house in New York City, and the molds were manufactured by the same firm.

The work in this city is being done by Eames & Young, the architects who have the contract for the building, assisted by skilled artisans from New York.

The process of manufacturing the many sections of which the ceiling is composed is difficult and intricate.

The models from which the molds were made were cast in clay in sections in New York and shipped to St. Louis.

As soon as the building had reached that stage where work on the ceiling was possible the Gotham workmen were sent for, and under their direction the task of making the molds was commenced.

A huge vat was filled with a compound of gelatine and glue, mixed in such proportions as to be flexible without being soft.

When this was thoroughly settled and cool the clay model was pressed down into it with great force and allowed to remain until every outline of the delicate filigree work was clear and distinct.

In another vat, by a process exactly opposite, was made another mold, fitting, even to the lightest line, into the first mold.

Then the composition from which the ceiling is made was poured into the first mold, and the second mold was pressed down on this with sufficient force to fill even the minutest crack with the plaster.

After being removed from the molds each piece of the prospective ceiling was found to be clear and white and shining and altogether beautiful, without a flaw.

Thus, piece by piece, enough material was manufactured in sections to cover more than 5,000 square feet of ceiling, and the work of constructing one of the most ornamental pieces of overhead work in St. Louis was commenced.

The material used was plaster of paris mixed with delicate wood fiber, which gives it great durability, without marring the smoothness of surface absolutely necessary to beauty.

Inside of each section, imbedded in the plaster, are wooden stiffeners. Around these are curled strong wires, and by this means each section is firmly anchored to the ceiling.

With such exactness are the different sections depended that it is impossible to detect the lines where the edges join.

As a consequence, the whole ceiling has the effect of having been carved out of a mammoth slab of stone or marble, and the effect is thus made doubly impressive.

The most noticeable features in connection with this ceiling are the coffers or sunk panels, from which it derives its name, and which lend to it the massive appearance that distinguishes it from other ceilings more ornamental in a certain way, but neither so beautiful nor impressive.

These panels are about two feet square, and are perfectly smooth.

The rest of the ceiling stands out from them in bold relief, 12 inches or more, richly ornamented and presenting an appearance of striking beauty.

The contour of the ceiling is very difficult to describe in familiar terms, and even the architects are unable to furnish the technical terms, more than to say it is a coffered ceiling of the style of the Italian renaissance.

The whole is now complete, and has been painted a yellowish green, which harmonizes well with the wainscoating and columns and other appointments, all of Sienna marble, greatly resembling onyx.

The sunlight streams down with a softened radiance through two skylights of cut glass, shedding on the unfinished room a mellower glow than is usually seen in a commercial building of any kind.

Were the ceiling higher, the windows of cutglass and the neighborhood more quiet, one might easily imagine himself standing inside a great cathedral, while the strains of the sonorous pipe organ pealed through the long aisles instead of the sound of workmen's hammers.

The ceiling has already attracted considerable attention and will doubtless attract more when the public learn of its many points of beauty and the intricacies of the process by which it was placed in position.

THEY BOTH SMOKED.

The Old Woman Had Her Pipe and the Little Girl a Cigar.

They stood together on the Lucas avenue side of Union Market. Nobody knew their names.

One was bent with years and wore a sunbonnet that almost wholly concealed her wrinkled features and shrunken face.

A lock of grizzled hair protruded aimlessly through an opening in the side of the bonnet.

She was evidently a grandmother of many years' standing, and her life had been spent amid pastoral scenes and close to the heart of nature.

Of the traditions of society and the manufacture of plug tobacco she knew nothing.

One could tell that by the unaffected simplicity of the manner in which she sucked those long 24-karat streams of smoke from a clay pipe with a cane stem.

She was nature's own.

By her side stood a wee bit of a girl, not more than 7 years old, with straggling hair and face unused to soap.

Her eyes were riveted on the procession of street cars passing on the south and west.

She gazed at them with evident wonder and enjoyment.

Standing there, amid the whirl of a great city's business, apparently unconscious of the attention she was attracting, was that wee bit of a girl with face unused to soap, smoking a rank cigar.

Where or when she lighted it nobody knew, but it was lighted and half consumed. Moreover, she seemed to be enjoying it thoroughly.

People stopped and gazed in wonder, some in horror, but little Miss Nicotine paid no atten[illegible] to them. She didn't seem to see them. She was simply taking what appeared to be her usual after dinner smoke.
